Risk Sets Opponents

By OSWALD JACOBY
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

I played the ace of hearts on my partner's queen. There was no reason at all to play low. Then I asked myself that important question, "How can we beat this contract?"

South had to have pretty good spades for his jump to game. He could not have much side strength beside the king of hearts that he was marked with on my partner's opening lead. If he had solid spades I should take my ace of diamonds before he ran off all the spades and clubs.

My next thought was that he didn't have to have solid spades. Suppose my partner had a trump trick? I had my ace of hearts home. Where could we get two more tricks? Not in hearts or clubs surely. How about diamonds? My ace was one trick. Could my ten be a second trick? Yes, if my partner held the jack and declarer held three or four diamonds.

It wasn't too good a prospect, but all I would risk would be one overtrick.

I decided to give the cards a chance and led my four of diamonds. My partner produced the jack and dummy won with the king. South led dummy's ten of spades and finessed. My partner won with the king and I had an anxious moment or two until he realized that his only hope was a diamond lead. Back came the diamond and down went South.
