Ranges Help To Sell New Homes

Home builders can tick off several facts to explain the trend toward installation of electric ranges in new housing developments. Here are a few of those most often cited by builders:

Wide choice of design: Whether a house is small or large, low-cost or luxury-priced, there's a suitable electric range for it. It may be a complete, self-contained range, or built-in wall ovens and separate surface units.

Color flexibility: Builders can give buyers a wide choice of kitchen color schemes with matching or contrasting electric appliances. Electric ranges are available in many attractive colors ranging from charcoal to white, as well as in stainless steel and copper finishes.

Sales appeal: Women like modern all-electric kitchens. The convenience and efficiency of electric cooking help sell builder homes in a highly competitive market. Men are conscious of the added cash value of a home with an all-electric kitchen.
