Wills recalled he "was concerned because I had a hemorrhage in my leg the last three weeks of the season and I didn't want any recurrence."

"I didn't want to be affected psychologically, I didn't want to be afraid of sliding or running," Wills said. "Then I'd had aches psychologically, I didn't want to be afraid of sliding or running."

Wills said, "Then I'd had aches in both knees, pretty constant, and I was worried about them."

"But I haven't had those troubles since I was hypnotized."

The 24-year-old redhead has had rough going this year after a 1962 season that saw him selected for both All-Star games, named sophomore of the American League and most valuable Minnesota Twins player by his teammates.

Today, Rollins' only contact with pitch thrown by Detroit hurler Paul Foytack at Knoxville, Tenn., played every spring game as though it were the seventh game of the World Series.

"Not only wasn't he hitting in Florida," said Green, "but he just seemed to be lost at third base. But we expect him to snap out of it," Green added. "We know Rich is a good ball player."

Coach Floyd Baker, who signed Rollins, has told Rollins that his serious approach could cut years off his career in the majors.

"Rollins shouldn't worry," Baker said. "He's a college graduate and would have a fine future even if it were not in baseball."

Manager Sam Mele hasn't given up on Rollins.

"We know what Rich can do. He'll come around," said Mele.

Rollins led the Twins to their second place finish last season with a .296 batting average. He hit 16 homers and drove in 96 runs.

Mele is hoping that Rollins takes advantage of his stay in the hospital by getting plenty of rest. But people who know the Kent State graduate figure he'll be doing little resting and a great deal of worrying.
