POLLY'S POINTERS

'Patch' For Percolator

POLLY CRAMER

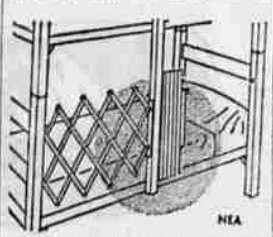

Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

DEAR POLLY — Almost any new or used baby bottle nipple will fit when the glass knob is broken on your percolator and there is not an extra one around the house. Best emergency item yet — MRS. L.N.B.

Don't laugh, girls. This might mean the difference between having or not having that morning coffee. — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — I keep my leafy herbs for cooking in dime store pepper mills. When I use them, they are freshly crushed and release more flavor. The matching salt shakers are used to hold fine spices and seasonings. I label the mills and shakers to avoid mixing them. — MRS.

F. A. McC. DEAR POLLY — The next time you have some olives left in an opened jar, pour a little salad oil over them to prevent mold from forming. Put the top back and they will keep a long time in the refrigerator. — IDA DEAR POLLY — My idea might help others with a crowded space problem. Our two children share one small room and the youngest child is under 2. I bought bunk beds and put a strip of wood down the center of the outer side of the bed. The other side is pushed against the wall. Two wooden folding gates were attached to this center support, one at either side, to make the lower bunk a safe crib for the baby. — HOPE

DEAR POLLY — On the shelf with my soap, bleach and other laundry supplies, I keep an old recipe file box. In this box I have an index card for each member of the family and one marked "miscellaneous." Whenever anyone in the family buys new clothes, I file the washing instructions behind that personal index card. Back of the miscellaneous card, I file washing instructions for tablecloths, curtains, and other household things. It helps to write a brief description of each article on the card to prevent mistakes. — MRS. C.H.
