American Women Open Equality Fight In 1848

WASHINGTON (UPI) — American women started fighting for political equality in 1848. They were denounced, insulted, spat upon and arrested before their hour of triumph on Aug. 26, 1920, when the 19th Amendment to the Constitution was proclaimed. It was short and got right to the point: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

The intervention of women in political matters was nothing new. But in the old days the ladies did it by indirect action. Helen of Troy did it by walking out on her husband, King Menelaus of Sparta, and joining forces with Paris in Troy, thereby igniting a war that lasted ten years. Madame Pompadour became the virtual ruler of France for 19 years as the mistress of King Louis XV.

In theory the American woman today is the absolute political equal of man. In practice she has not won equality. Of the 100 members of the U.S. Senate, only two are women—Margaret Chase Smith, Republican from Maine, and Maurine Neuberger, Democrat from Oregon. Of the 435 members of the House of Representatives, only 21 are women.

Predicted Movie Star Congress Many were the dire predictions when women got the vote. It was freely forecast that John Barrymore and his notable profile would become president of the United States and that Congress would be filled with handsome male movie stars. Actually nothing much happened although it seems certain the female vote has been decisive occasionally.

For instance, professional politicians in both parties agree that Dwight D. Eisenhower was unbeat-able at the polls because of his strong appeal to women. Not because he was handsome but because the women were convinced he knew all about war and how to keep the country out of it. Susan B. Anthony precipitated the first court test of women's suffrage by going to the polls in Rochester, N.Y., in 1872 and demanding a ballot. She was arrested, fined, refused to pay the fine and carried her fight up to the Supreme Court where she lost.

It was Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, head of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, who led the fight for a constitutional amendment giving women the right to vote. She was an organizational genius and knew exactly how and when to turn the heat on senators and congressmen. Her campaign began in 1915 and in five years the battle was over. Women's suffrage monopolized the conversation in most American living rooms in the early years of the 20th century and even the servants got into it. Mary Fouke Morrison says her Italian cook inquired one day what the excitement was about and when it was explained the cook asked: "You mean I am now the equal of my husband?" Assured that she was, the cook departed for home that night with a gleam in her eye. She returned the next morning with a black eye and her faith in the equality of women shaken forever.

Each class will be competing against other classes to earn the most money, with free milkshakes promised the winning class. The high school office is serving as an employment office this week and phone calls asking for work-ers are to be directed there.
