WALL STREET CHATTER

NEW YORK (UPI)—Colby & Co. notes that nearly all reliable technical indicators are following a bullish trend.

The firm feels that the two most important stock groups, from a technical standpoint, the industrials and the rails, have been confirming the action of each other consistently, and it considers this a good indication that market performance will be excellent.

Lawrence Bleiberg of Bache & Co. believes selectivity is the key-note to profitable investing at this state of the market.

Thomson & McKinnon says investor confidence is being supported by "increasing proof that supply can be readily absorbed" despite skepticism over the market being near its all-time high only a year after the collapse.

WALL STREET

NEW YORK (UPI)—Stocks drove to within striking distance of the record high set in December, 1961, then turned mixed on profit taking which hit in the final hour.

Du Pont tumbled more than 2 in a narrow chemical section but Chrysler scored a modest gain in the motors. Steels were narrow.

Standard of Jersey scored a point-sized gain in an otherwise narrow international oil group.

Electronics were volatile, rising sharply early in the session and then retreating on profit taking toward the close.

New Law Revoke's Klamath County's Exclusion From Reorganization

What is Senate Bill 287, relating to school districts, and what does it mean to Klamath County during this period of grave school problems and heated debates over reorganization proposals?

Probably the most important aspect of the recently passed bill (May 13) is the fact that the legislation repeals the 1961 provision that excluded Klamath County from the state reorganization law.

Now Klamath County for the first time can reorganize its school districts any way it wishes, subject to approval by the county board and the state board of education.

When asked to comment on the new law, school superintendents Ray Hunsaker, city, and Cliff Robinson, county, both agreed the law was a good vehicle for reorganization and simplified the process.

"The new law is a good instrument for reorganization and it makes it possible for the school district boundaries to be drawn anywhere they're needed," Hunsaker said.

"Under the new law there is also a provision that gives the county a choice in the number of directors desired for the school board or boards," the superintendent continued.

The county superintendent, speaking in part for his school board members who have been outspoken critics of the single district reorganization proposal, said that the new law "now gives the people in the area an opportunity to restudy reorganization and boundary re-alignment."

G. W. Huffman Dies Tuesday

George William Huffman, 46, Ashland, a native of Klamath County, died in Ashland at the home of his mother about 1:30 a.m. June 4. Death apparently followed a heart attack.

He had gone with his family to spend the weekend with his mother, Mrs. Blanche Huffman, 137 North Main Street. He had been employed at Diamond Lake for three weeks.

Mr. Huffman was a native of Klamath Falls, born Oct. 28, 1916. He attended school in Klamath Falls until moving to Ashland with his family in 1924.

More specifically, Robinson said, "we now have the legal machinery to re-examine the possibility of a two-district setup."

The three school boards in their joint meetings over the past few months came closest to agreement over a two-district plan, but were stymied when they couldn't agree on a system of equalization. Both 50-50 and 60-40 equalization were proposed and it seemed at one point that the boards were close to agreement on 60-40 equalization, but when it came to a vote it was defeated.

Under the new law if Klamath County were to reorganize into two separate school districts 1-12 the rural school law would automatically be effective and equalization would be built in, Hunsaker feels.

The operating budgets of the two separate districts would be combined under the rural school law and half of the budget total would be levied county-wide. The other half would be levied within the separate districts along with capital outlays.

The new law also facilitates minor boundary changes in that the county court acting as a school "committee" could make these minor boundary changes without a vote of the people involved. The people involved in the boundary change would have a chance to remonstrate if they felt the change wasn't suitable and the remonstrance would be reviewed by the state board.

In the event of major reorganization, a vote of the people would be required before the change could be effected, Hunsaker felt. The reorganization plan would have to be approved by the state board and the county court before it was referred to the people for a vote.

Robinson said he didn't feel the rural school law would automatically become effective in the county district if the school districts were reorganized under the new law. He also said he wasn't sure that a vote of the people would be needed for major reorganization.

"The new provisions under Senate Bill 287 are complicated and require qualified legal interpretation," Robinson said.

Hoagland Resigns From Commission

A pioneer member of the Klamath Falls Planning Commission who is observing the benefits that his efforts as a planning commissioner have contributed to the city completed his 13th year on the commission Monday and has declined to be reappointed to the post.

He is Fred Hoagland, who has served with the commission since it became established by city ordinance on Jan. 1, 1950, including the two-year period from July, 1960, through July, 1962, when he was chairman.

Hoagland declined to continue serving as a commissioner in order to devote more time to his real estate interests and personal affairs.

He has been succeeded by Sam Ritchey, district manager of the Pacific Power and Light Company, whose appointment to the commission became effective Monday, when it was approved by Mayor Robert Veatch and the city council upon the recommendation of the planning commission.

The post marks the third time that Ritchey has been called to serve the city on one of its various committees.

About 30 years ago, Ritchey was named to the Traffic Safety Council, then sponsored by the state, and continued to serve that group after it was transferred to the city and became known as the Traffic Safety Committee.

He served as a member
