

State Education Board Moves To Smooth Over Bad Feelings

CORVALLIS (UPI) — The State Board of Higher Education moved Tuesday to soothe fears and hard feelings touched off when the legislature authorized the transfer of patients from the University of Oregon Tuberculosis Hospital at Portland to the State Tuberculosis Hospital at Salem. Chancellor Roy E. Llewellyn promised the physical transfer of the patients would come on a timetable based on their health and welfare. He promised "nothing less than the best that can be provided."

The board gave the Medical School responsibility for the move and indicated that a physician would be named administrator of the Salem hospital. That hospital fell under the board's control in a last-day compromise at the legislature.

Presidents of four schools predicted differing effects from the raising of tuition fees for out-of-state students.

Administrator Winston Purvine of Oregon Technical Institute said he expected a substantial decrease in the number of out-of-state students. President Branford Millar of Portland State said the increase probably would have little effect on his enrollment, while Presidents Arthur S. Fleming of Oregon State and James Jensen of Oregon State said it was too early to tell how it would affect their schools.

Llewellyn announced the state system and its schools received $29,504,876 in gifts and grants in the 1961-62 biennium.

Board members were told that the member schools were eliminating many smaller classes to save money. Llewellyn reported a 14 per cent reduction in the number of classes having less than 10 students last year.

The board also approved action taken a day earlier by its building committee.
