

House Unit Compromising On JFK's Plan For Tax Cut

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Kennedy administration is compromising a little on how much of a tax cut it will accept for individual taxpayers.

The compromising is going on in the House Ways & Means Committee, which is in the midst of making key decisions on what President Kennedy's tax program will look like when it finally goes to a vote.

The all-important verdict on how much of a tax break the committee is willing to give Mr. Average Taxpayer is still to come.

Individual tax rates now range from 20 to 91 per cent. Kennedy originally recommended that the range be lowered to 14 to 65 per cent. Now the administration is willing to settle for a 15 to 75 per cent scale.

As a rough average, this would be a reduction of about one-sixth on individual income taxes.

Influential conservative Democrats on the committee are seeking to trim the amount of tax reduction Kennedy requested.

There are two main reasons for this. The "puritan-minded" conservatives who support a balanced budget wish to hold down the amount of reduction in federal income at a time when the government is running a big budget deficit.

The other reason is that the committee thus far has failed to approve many of Kennedy's income-raising changes to offset part of the tax reductions. The pressure therefore is to trim the tax reductions accordingly.

Kennedy proposed $13.6 billion in tax rate cuts, and $3.2 billion in tax increases, for a net $10.4 billion reduction. The committee so far has approved tax increases amounting to only $600 million, but may raise this around the $1 billion mark.

The committee already has been criticized by the AFL-CIO for considering lesser cuts for individual taxpayers, especially low income families. On the other extreme, business interests are pressuring the committee to approve the full $2.6 billion cut in corporation taxes recommended by Kennedy.

Over-Anxious Moms Called 'Sickening'

By ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I just read your column on young girls who are being turned into sex kittens by over-anxious mothers who want their daughters to be popular. You mentioned eye make-up, nylons and heels for 11-year-olds. I have a 13-year-old daughter who is a basketball hair-do on 13-year-olds and going steady at 14.

The over-anxious mothers are getting a great assist from the eager characters who try to separate the fool from his dollar. Listen to this ad which appeared in a newspaper in another city. A friend sent it with a one-word note: "Sickening!"

"Teen accounts welcomed. Rings with diamonds for the girl you are going with. Beautiful twin hearts with a sparkling diamond. Only $11.95. Can be paid out of 50 cents a week. Open your teen account today."

In the same ad was a picture of the "Princess diamond ring—for your steady girl." This was priced at $39.50 and could be had for $1 a week. It boasted "15 brilliant diamonds." I would like your opinion of this—PLENTY OLD-FASHIONED.

Dear Plenty: Your friend's one-word comment expresses my sentiments perfectly. But don't blame the manufacturer, the advertiser or the retailer. They don't create customers. They simply give the customers what they want.

Teen-agers who have been raised with decent values will laugh at such nonsense.

like the plague if they think you want to discuss a problem. People have no one to talk to anymore—and their troubles grow into illnesses.

Yes, I know there are psychiatrists and analysts but they have no place in the beginning—only after people are too sick to get help elsewhere. And not everyone can afford treatment.

So please tell these so-called "humanitarians" that service means putting the needs of others first. If they don't want to be bothered let them do something else and stop calling themselves doctors and ministers. —PITTSBURGH CITIZEN

Dear Pittsburgh: It is grossly unfair to put all doctors and clergymen in the same barrel and tar them with the same brush. I know many doctors and clergymen who are dedicated to public service. I'm sorry you don't know them, too—your life would be incomparably richer if you did.

Dear Ann Landers: I address myself to the woman who calls herself a doctor's wife and signed her letter "Amazed At Your Ignorance."

I wish someone would remind these doctors' wives who are afraid their husbands might get a call at home that they chose the profession because they wanted to help people. The same goes for ministers. I am sick of hearing wives of doctors and clergymen complain because they are inconvenienced at odd hours.

We wonder why mental problems are on the increase? One reason may be that ministers and doctors are no longer available for consultation. They avoid you

Refuge Chief Promoted

ALTURAS — The United States Fish and Wildlife Service announced this week the transfer and promotion of Paul Steel, manager of the Modoc Wildlife Refuge, to assistant regional refuge supervisor in Region 5. Steel, who has been the manager of the local refuge since its establishment in 1962, will leave for his new post in Boston, Mass., the first of July. He will supervise the New England area.

Steel's new post is a newly created position in the wildlife management system to study and establish master planning for the development and operation of refuges.

This is the third "first" for Steele. He was the first manager at the Columbia Refuge in Central Washington for six years before taking over the post of the Modoc Refuge. He graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1949 and received his master's degree in wildlife management from the University of Idaho, Moscow, in 1952.

His first assignment after graduation was to the Tulelake Refuge, where he served for two years as the first biologist on the refuge before going to Washington, D.C., for a year's training in public administration.

He and his wife, Beverly, and daughters, Wendy and Nancy, and son Mark will move the first week in July.
