

Young Republicans Now Wield Party Influence

EDITOR'S NOTE: Barry Goldwater for president... Repeal of the federal income tax... withdrawal from the United Nations... arming of Cuban exiles. These are some of the policies advocated by the strongly conservative new head of the National Young Republican Federation, which has come to wield increasing influence in the GOP. What if Goldwater isn't the 1964 Republican presidential nominee? What about the Birchers? What has been the reaction of senior GOP leaders to the swing to the right by the "Juniors?" Donald (Bud) Lukens, Young Republican president, gives his candid views in the following exclusive interview.

By RAYMOND LAHR And FRANK ELEAZER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Donald E. (Bud) Lukens, elected Young Republican national chairman after a public endorsement of Sen. Barry Goldwater for president, pledged himself today to a neutral stand on potential GOP candidates and promised to support whoever is nominated.

But the outspoken 32-year-old minority clerk of the House Rules Committee, in a question-and-answer session with UPI reporters, reaffirmed his belief in the Arizona senator's conservative philosophy; said a conservative Republican would run better next year than a "me too" candidate; and predicted defeat of President Kennedy no matter who gets the nod.

Lukens, a bachelor from Xenia, Ohio, is a self-styled "amateur" and newcomer to politics. He won the chairmanship of the Young Republican Federation in San Francisco last month after what he conceded was a "tempestuous" convention and what his predecessor called a "nightmare" session at which police once were called to keep order.

In his campaign for the two-year office Lukens, who previously had won chairmanship of the federation's District of Columbia unit, publicly committed himself to Goldwater; advocated repeal of the income tax, and called for withdrawal of the United States from the United Nations.

Lukens, whose campaign and election prompted some concern among senior Republicans about the GOP image projected from the Young Republican Convention, said nobody in the party hierarchy had censured him, and he said he had met nothing but friendly cooperation at party headquarters here.

Q. Accounts of your convention appear to show the convention was solidly for Goldwater. Is that a correct assessment?

A. That accounting of the convention, yes. I wouldn't agree with many others.

Q. And you yourself endorsed Goldwater. How can you be neutral now?

A. I can be neutral, simply by doing my job. The federation always has been neutral and as far as I am concerned, and as far as anybody working under me, it will be neutral. We will endorse any Republican nominee who has been officially selected.

Q. Your predecessor in this job (Leonard Nadassy of Minnesota, who presided at the convention) said that he saw in the convention evidence that the real objective of the John Birch Society "is to subvert the Republican party and to seize control" of the party.

A. I don't know about the subverting, and I am not a member of the John Birch Society and never will be. Along the same line, I will not condone or condemn them. My politics are Republican. I have room for anyone in the Republican party and I will not take part in any political activity outside the Republican party.

Q. Do you think the position of conservatism espoused by this convention should be the position of the GOP?

A. Basically I do think the conservative philosophy is the predominant philosophy at this time within the framework of the Republican party. And, yes, I think it should be listened to. I think the overriding conclusion from the convention is that Young Republicans want to have a voice, and want their voice heard.

Lukens said an important factor in the coming presidential election is the possibility of Republican gains in Congress. He said with a conservative standard bearer the party could pick up 10 to 25 House seats "permanently and quickly" from southern areas previously written off to Democrats.

He conceded that such a stand by the party nationally could hurt chances of some liberal GOP candidates from the East but said, "I'm more concerned with the fate generally of the Republican party than with any specific area."

Q. Is it true you have recommended repeal of the personal income tax?

A. In essence, yes.

Q. Then where are you going to get the money?

A. There are 20 different ways of going at this problem. The first thing of course is to reduce federal spending to its absolute minimum. I think we spend too much money for example in the field of foreign aid. In other areas, I would like to see state assumption of more areas of social welfare.

Q. Wouldn't you have to pay more state taxes then?

A. That's true. I'm not against state taxes.

Lukens said he favors withdrawal of the United States from the United Nations "as presently structured." He said the United Nations has not accomplished its mission. As a substitute he suggested creation of a "United Nations of the free world," as proposed by former President Hoover.

Q. Do you have any general advice for the Republican party on how to win elections?

A. I think what we have not done is sell our positive accomplishments over the past 30 years. This is one of the things this new group (The Young Republicans) wants to do. We need to educate the general public as well as our own party as to the accomplishments of our party within the recent years. We need to tell the people about our stand on civil rights, a stand that actually is stronger than the Democrat party's.

Q. If you do that, how do you also carry the South?

A. I don't think that the South, the individual Southerner, is as concerned about the civil rights issue as he is about the economic and social and political future of that portion of the country.

Q. In its civil rights resolution your executive committee appears to have come out against a proposed public accommodations law.

A. I have in my mind serious and sincere doubts as to whether it's a violation of a personal right to refuse service or to insist on service. It has not been legally decided. I am not a racist. I am definitely, if anything, a liberal on civil rights. I'm for these people 100 per cent and there's no doubt that any citizen of the United States must have the right to vote, the right to housing, the right to education, the right to employment. But I do not want to confuse privileges with rights.
