

British Sex Story Spreads

LONDON (UPI) — Two new developments emerged in Britain's sex and security scandal Saturday as Dr. Stephen A. Ward readied a "no names barred" defense for his vice trial, which opens Monday.

An Athens newspaper reported it has learned the identity of a top British government official who allegedly attended a wild sex party wearing only a mask, apron and shoes. It identified the official by name.

And an attorney for a "missing witness" in the Ward trial — which threatens to "blow the top" off London's upper crust society — said his client would appear and testify.

The afternoon newspaper Niki (Victory) published a story from its London correspondent, naming the now infamous masked waiter allegedly involved in Britain's sex and security scandal as a member of Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's government.

The correspondent credited as his source a "young and most beautiful English girl, the daughter of a lord permanently staying in India. She is well-known in English high society because of her scandalous love affairs and who repeatedly participated in Mayfair sex parties and who wants to hide behind the name of — — — which is also her artistic pseudonym."

The newspaper said its correspondent is believed to be the first British journalist who discovered the masked waiter's identity. It said he checked his information Thursday morning at the House of Commons where several Labor members of Parliament confirmed that the name of the British official is being whispered in lobbies. They assured him, the newspaper said, the opposition Labor Party will strongly criticize the government in Parliament after Scotland Yard completes its investigation.
