75 Tutors Take Honor Class Course

Seventy five teachers of high school honors classes in Oregon are attending two Advanced Placement Institutes at the University of Oregon from Aug. 4 to 16.

The two - week training institutes in English and American history are designed to strengthen the backgrounds of the high school teachers who instruct advanced placement courses in the high schools of the state.

Participating teachers will either be teaching advanced placement courses in the high schools, or will be using advanced placement materials and methods in honors courses.

The high school advanced placement program offers freshmen college level work to superior students. Those who successfully complete the program and tests credit for their work when they enter college.

The summer institute program for teachers is in its fourth year in Oregon. It began in 1960 with two three-day institutes in American history and English held at the University of Oregon. In 1961 the institutes were lengthened to two weeks. An institute in European history was added to the program in 1962 and the American history institute was held at Reed College.

The program this year includes the two current institutes at the University of Oregon and an earlier institute in European history held at Reed College.

The institute program is directed by the Oregon Council on Advanced Placement, and the University of Oregon acts as host institute. It is financed by a grant to the State Department of Education from the Fund for the Ford Foundation. All instructional costs and half the maintenance of participants are provided through the grant.

Sixty-two teachers are enrolled in the English institute, which includes work in poetry, fiction, drama, and composition for Advanced Placement tests.

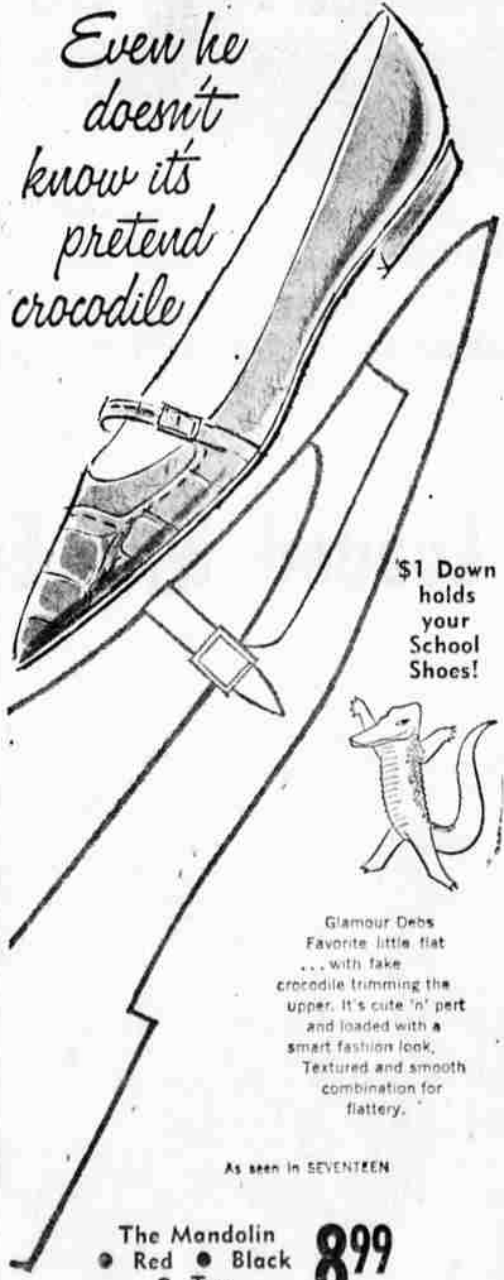

The 13 teachers enrolled in the history institute are discussing phases of history, advanced placement examinations, and classroom techniques.

Director of the institutes is Dr. Roland Bartel, acting associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts at the University of Oregon, who has been active in the Advanced Placement program in Oregon since its inception.

Instructors on the English institute staff include Dr. Bartel, Martin Meisel of Dartmouth College, and Richard Bridgman of the University of California in Berkeley.
