New Fair Rule Expands Exhibitor Opportunities

TULELAKE—A new rule by the Division of Fairs & Expositions which affects the Tulelake-Butte Valley Fair makes it possible this year for many non-profit organizations to participate as exhibitors.

Bill Whitaker, fair manager, in explaining the change said that in the past only agricultural groups (cooperatives, bureaus, etc.) were eligible to sponsor and compete for the $2,500 awards offered in that division.

Under the new ruling any non-profit organization recognized in the community and by the fair is eligible to enter. This means, Whitaker reports, that now church groups, service clubs, fraternities and sororities can enter an agricultural display under their own names.

Rightists Plan New Assaults At Mobile School Sites

By United Press International

Integrationists planned another siege today at a mobile school site on Chicago's turbulent South Side where pickets Monday charged police lines in a demonstration that erupted into a rock-hurling brawl.

At least 50 persons were arrested in the demonstration, which stretched out over the day and reached a climax when the pickets charged the police and hurled rocks.

Hard-pressed police threw body blocks and tackled the demonstrators in attempts to prevent them from hindering workers laying down pipe for an emplacement of the trailer-like classrooms.

The demonstrations remained at the site late Monday night and promised they would return today.

Fair Slates Welk Pianist

TULELAKE—JoAnn Castle, the peppy, blonde "ragtime gal" of the television Lawrence Welk show, who "tears tunes" from the piano keys, will be a guest artist on the grandstand show on the opening night of the Tulelake-Butte Valley Fair, Sept. 6.

Fair Manager William C. Whitaker announced the lady musician will play two piano and two accordion numbers. In addition to her television show, JoAnn Castle is a radio and record star.

The Portland Journal-Juniors, who have charmed past fair audiences on opening nights, will be on hand for both the Friday night show and again on Saturday night. Tickets for the Castle Show will be sold on a first-come, first-served basis. There will be no reserved seats in the main part of the grandstand. There will be 1,400 tickets printed and sold which insures a seat to every one buying a ticket. Those wanting tickets should write the fair office at Tulelake immediately. Past opening nights have been sellouts.
