

Community House Serves As Headquarters For Washington March

By JOHN J. GOLDMAN
United Press International
A four-story yellow stucco house stands on a block of red brick tenements near a playground in New York City's Harlem.

Only the 10 telephones and a switchboard are brand new. In this building — a community house where social workers toiled last month to keep children off the streets — a handful of men and women are organizing what they intend to be the greatest civil rights demonstration in America's history.

The building on West 120th St. is the national office of a group called the "March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom." The March, Aug. 28, a Wednesday, is designed to bring at least 100,000 persons to the capital. The marchers will include both Negroes and Whites.

The logistics problem would stagger a general. How do you transport poverty-stricken Negroes from the delta outside Greenwood, Miss., to Washington?

And how, on a $65,000 budget, do you reach the unemployed, church groups, fraternities, labor unions and convince them to take part in a rally in the middle of the summer vacation season?

Recruiting 2,000 marshals to keep order. They will be directed by Members of the Guardians, a society of Negro policemen on the New York City force. Current plans call for the marshals and guardians to train in crowd control and rehearse along the line of march several days before the demonstration.

The District of Columbia's 2,800 man police force is taking no chances. All leaves have been cancelled for the day of the march.

There appears to be a sincere desire on the part of civil rights leaders and the police to avoid any incident resembling the bonus march of 1932 when an "army" of 20,000 veterans and their families came to Washington to demand early payment of World War I bonuses.

Police tried to move the demonstrators from Treasury buildings, fighting broke out and two persons were killed. The demonstration ended when President Herbert Hoover called out the Army.

Barnett Moves To Block Graduation Of Meredith

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI) — Gov. Ross R. Barnett has moved to block the graduation of James H. Meredith from the University of Mississippi next Sunday. Meredith termed Barnett's action "purely political."

Barnett claimed Meredith has made a number of statements to newsmen which "clearly and unmistakably" violate the terms of the directive.

Meredith, who was enrolled at Ole Miss last September with the backing of federal troops after a night of campus rioting, called Barnett's move "purely political."

"It might be pretty hard for Gov. Barnett's forces to win an election if I graduate," Meredith said when contacted at his dormitory.

Barnett is reportedly backing Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson against former Gov. J. P. Coleman in Mississippi's current governor's race.

Barnett said in a statement Monday he believed the 30-year-old Meredith violated a directive by university president John D. Williams which advised students and faculty against making public statements about the desegregation crisis.

Meredith is scheduled to receive his bachelor's degree Sunday.

Study Planned By Portland

PORTLAND (UPI) — The Portland School Board Monday named a 43-member committee, headed by a circuit judge, to determine if Negro students are being denied equal rights in the public school system here.

Circuit Judge Herbert M. Swab heads the committee, which includes leaders in business, labor, professional religious, and education fields.

Objectives were listed as recommendation of corrective steps if it is found Negro students are denied equal opportunities; to recommend what might be done to improve achievement of students in culturally deprived areas, and to recommend what the school system might do to eliminate unreasoned racial prejudice by school children.
