'Nuremberg' Author Wants To Make Movie About Russia — On Location

NEW YORK (UPI) — Abby Mann, a writer whose screenplay for "Judgment at Nuremberg" won an Academy Award, wants to produce a movie about Russia today—on location in the Soviet Union.

Mann is convinced that Americans do not know much about Russia and Russians. "I'd like to make a movie that would tell the story of modern-day Russians in terms of their problems so that they could be easily understood."

"I do not presume to be an expert on Russia on the basis of my two-weeks there," Mann said. "But I do know that Americans, including myself, have a myriad of misconceptions about the country and its people."

"I thought Russians would be grumbling about their lot in life. They weren't. They were happy, good-natured and convinced that things were good and getting better."

"I'm not saying that everything is perfect in Moscow. But there is plenty of food and the people are well-dressed. If there is any one problem that stands out in my mind it is the lack of housing. But there are no slums in Moscow."

Mann was surprised by the reaction to a speech he made to a Film Festival audience of about 800 persons, including 25 Russian movie producers, writers and directors.

He said in the speech that any artist, whatever his medium, "must be free to assail any institution, any status quo, any sacred cow, and let the chips fall, as they may."

He was sure that the Russians would object to the speech.

"Instead, the audience cheered and applauded so loudly that I thought there was a thunderstorm."

Mann said he saw 15 Russian movies while he was in Moscow. "Most of them were pretty bad," he said. "They stick to a party line, the scripts are rather soapy and the characters are faceless."

Mann said there was one exception to this—a movie called "Nine Days of One Year."

"This was a good movie," he said. "It told the story of an atomic scientist injured by radiation and made a point for the futility of nuclear weapon testing. It was frank and honest."

Russian film writers and producers want to make more movies like it, Mann said, but all scripts have to be approved by the government before they go into production. "They want to make movies that capture Russian life as it really is. So far, they haven't had much success."

At present, Mann is writing the screenplay for a Stanley Kramer movie based on "Ship of Fools," the best-selling novel by Katherine Anne Porter.

When that is finished, "and my deadline is September," Mann will work on the script for "The Children of Sanchez," a movie about Mexico which will star Anthony Quinn and Rita Moreno.

Lady Lighting Expert Claims American Homes Dimly Lit

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — Elizabeth Anne Meehan, a lighting specialist, says the room dimly seen is as much a part of the American home as the rug on the floor.

"I'm convinced," she said, "that the average American householder is stumbling around in a dim world. It's one of the reasons for so many home accidents."

Miss Meehan wants more light shed on the whole household, with lighting concentrated in work areas such as the kitchen, the sewing corner, the study area for the children.

There should be at least three sources of light for a room—local lighting to sew or read by, general lighting or the walls washed with light to prevent "puddles" of light on the ceiling or floor, and accent lighting such as the chandelier, the glow from the fireplace, or the candle," she said.

Lights On—Forget Bill
And to Miss Meehan there should be lights on in rooms, even though the rooms are not in immediate use.

As an old light switcher-offer from way back, I accused this lighting expert of lobbying for the power companies.

"Not at all," she said, in an interview. "Keep in mind that as you move from a lighted room to a darkened room, the eyes don't adapt rapidly. Correct lighting is a big factor in eye health, you know. And you only have one pair of eyes for a lifetime."

"Besides," she added, "lighting is one of the cheapest products for the home. A 150-watt reading lamp burns 150 watts an hour. An electric iron in the same time will burn from 1000 to 1500 watts."

"Women invest in beautiful rugs, draperies and furniture," she said, "but the decor is wasted if lighting doesn't show it off."

Learned Lighter
Miss Meehan, a tall, blue-eyed brunette, is a native of Philadelphia, a graduate of Chestnut Hill College, attended the University of Pennsylvania, the Philadelphia Museum School of Art, Spring Garden Institute, Philadelphia, and the Lighting Institute, Cleveland.

She is a member of the Illuminating Engineering Society, has been a lighting consultant since 1953, and holds several design awards in lighting competition. Currently, she is the residential lighting specialist for Sylvania Electric Products Inc., based in Salem, Mass.

She said as a residential lighting adviser, she travels 50,000 miles plus a year, working with architects, interior designers, the home furnishings industry and utility companies on home lighting.

"I'm trying to influence the influencers," she said.

Need Total Lighting
"Thinking in home lighting still is stereotyped," she said during a business trip to New York. "We think in terms of table lamps and maybe a floor lamp, not in terms of creating a total luminous environment which you can get with the use of recessed and built-in lighting."

The kitchen is one of the most neglected areas, she said—"no wonder so many cut fingers, burned hands." It should have a special light wherever the home-maker works with the source of the light ahead of her. Sink and stove need lights above them.

Some other tips from Miss Meehan:

—Seek professional advice from your local utility. Most have home lighting advisers to help with planning schemes for both recessed and portable lighting.

—When buying a portable lamp, light it first to see how much illumination gets through the shade. Look for a diffuser beneath the bulb or bulbs. The bottom of the shade should be at least 42 inches from the floor.

OSU May See Enrollment Drop

CORVALLIS (UPI) — Enrollment at Oregon State University this fall may be under the 10,000 registration of last year, Milosh Popovich, OSU dean of administration, told the Corvallis Chamber of Commerce Monday.

There are about 300 fewer student reservations for dormitories this year, he said.

Last January it was estimated there would be 10,900 students enrolled this fall, he said. This was cut to 10,400 when out-of-state tuition and entrance requirements were increased. Now, he said, the latter estimate looks optimistic.

Bear In Alaska Kills Engineer

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (UPI) — William Strandberg, mining engineer and brother of State Rep. Harold Strandberg, was killed by a bear late Friday near Tolt, about 150 miles west of here, the State Police reported Tuesday.

John Monahan, State Police captain, said he received a sketchy radio report on the death of Strandberg, who was 52.

Strandberg and his brother, Harold, were moving some mining equipment at the time of the attack. Bears have attacked two other men in the same general area within the past two weeks but both escaped.
