

Germany Signs Test Treaty With Misgivings

By PHIL NEWSOM

Sin being an offense which all right-thinking men must recognize, West Germany last week signed the partial nuclear test ban treaty in Moscow, London and Washington.

But it was with obvious misgivings. These misgivings sprang not from any disagreement with men's efforts to avoid self-annihilation.

Rather, they were tied to a mistrust of Washington, which also affects other Europeans and which among West Germans takes specific form in a fear that eventually they will be asked to recognize the permanence of a divided Germany.

It was this fear that Secretary of State Dean Rusk had to overcome in his Bonn stopover on the way back from Moscow and which led the West Germans to sign the treaty in no way implied recognition of the Communist East German regime.

Werren's Properly Informed

It also led the West Germans to complain that, whatever Washington's good intent, they had not been filled in properly on steps leading up to the treaty nor on Washington's decision to cut its 6,000-man Berlin garrison to 10 per cent.

Now the Germans appear similarly disturbed by suggestions out of Washington, the disarmament talks in Geneva, and from Moscow that the next area for exploratory talks could be the establishment of inspectors in countries of both East and West to guard against surprise attack.

And again they complain that they have not had an adequate fill-in.

Despite U. S. assurances that no agreement on an inspector system would be reached without full approval of the NATO partners — which means both West Germany and France — the Germans have asked that the subjects of safeguards against surprise attack be taken up by the NATO council "at a very early date."

Fear Possible Isolation

The Germans are said to fear that in its early stages an inspector system might involve only the two Germanies, tending to isolate West Germany from the Western alliance.

While these fears might be dismissed as a case of German jitters, it is also true that they lie at the core of what has been West German policy since the inception of the West German Federal Republic in 1949.

Chancellor Konrad Adenauer fought for and won West Germany's right to enter NATO as a full and equal partner. He has been equally adamant in opposing any act which might imply recognition of East Germany.

The so-called "hot line" between Washington and Moscow and systems of inspection both are directed toward easing world tensions and as such are welcomed by the Western Allies. But equally, they don't want the two big powers carving up the world to suit themselves.

Kin Meet After 29 Years

With marriage and employment scattering families all over the country, it is not uncommon for brothers and sisters to be separated by the distance factor for a number of years.

Such was the case of Charlie A. Ramp, 500 Martin Street, who until last week had not seen a Jacksonville, Fla., sister, Mrs. John Mahoney, for over 29 years.

Since moving to Oregon, Ramp occasionally visited three other sisters in Oklahoma, as did Mrs. Mahoney, but they never seemed to schedule their trips at the same time.

Finally Mrs. John Wayne Jr., of Tulsa, Mrs. Jack Lindoff of Tecumseh, and Mrs. Helen Whitman of Oklahoma City decided to bring the long-parted pair together by staging a family reunion at Aug. 10.

The biggest surprise of the reunion was saved for the Florida sister, who was not told that her brother would be present. Although she did not immediately recognize him, Mrs. Mahoney and Ramp were soon happily recalling events of their childhood in Illinois and catching up on 29 years of news.
