

Present Nuclear Test Ban Treaty Outgrowth Of Five Years Effort

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The nuclear test ban treaty before the Senate today is the outcome of five years of intensive negotiations with Russia and of hopes dating back to the start of the nuclear arms race in 1945.

The United States, Britain and Russia—the three present nuclear powers—first sat down at Geneva to try to negotiate a test ban agreement on Oct. 31, 1958.

The agreement initiated in Moscow by the three powers last July 25 and signed Aug. 5 is a partial fulfillment of an original goal to ban all types of nuclear weapons tests.

The treaty, which is subject to ratification by a two-thirds vote of the U.S. Senate, pledges the three countries to refrain from nuclear testing in the atmosphere, outer space and under water.

Underground Tests Continue

Because of Russia's refusal to accept international inspection of Soviet territory, which the West deemed necessary to check against secret underground tests, the treaty leaves underground testing for later negotiations. The U.S. underground test program in Nevada is continuing.

The treaty was opened to all other countries to sign, regardless of whether they are nuclear powers. More than 80 other nations, ranging from West Germany to Western Samoa, have put their names to it.

However, the treaty pledges the three nuclear powers to refrain from "causing, encouraging or in any way participating in" nuclear weapons tests in other countries.

In case one country believes another has violated the treaty with secret tests, there is a broad escape clause: "Each party shall in exercising its national sovereignty, have the right to withdraw from the treaty if it decides that extraordinary events related to the subject matter... have jeopardized (its) supreme interests." In such case a country is supposed to give three months' notice of withdrawal.

President Kennedy said in a July 26 address to the nation, that the treaty was a step toward reducing tensions and limiting the spread of nuclear weapons to other countries.

COS Registration Fees Remain Same As 1962

WEED—Registration fees for on-campus evening classes at the College of the Siskiyou will remain at last year's rate of $2.30 per class, the governing board of the Siskiyou Joint Junior College District has decided.

The board, at its meeting last Thursday, also announced that contracts for evening classes have been mailed to various high school and elementary school districts and that evening classes in these districts will commence when the contracts are returned.

Shasta Gas of Weed submitted the low bid for supplying gas to the college this year and was high bidder for one of two propane tanks offered for sale by the college. The other tank went to Mount Shasta Community Hospital.
