

Weed Council To Rule On Nepotism In City

WEED — A resolution banning city council members, their spouses, or children from holding paid city positions will be considered by the Weed City Council at the October meeting, William Heideveld, city attorney, was asked by the council to draft such a resolution at the meeting Thursday night.

Immediate relatives of paid employees would also be barred from city employment under the terms of the proposed resolution.

The council, representing a new city, may wish to avoid employment patterns that have proven a detriment to other cities, Heideveld acknowledged, but if such a resolution is adopted in Weed, modifications must be anticipated because Weed is a small, closely interrelated town.

Four resolutions were passed at the meeting. The gas tax measure was accepted by resolution and will provide Weed with an estimated $7,200 additional street funds. A special swimming pool fund account was created to administer the $9,430.07 turned over to the city by the Lions Club.

A resolution was passed authorizing continuance of the joint animal control agreement with Mount Shasta. Weed will pay $3,445.48 under terms of the annual contract, half the control costs. A resolution was also passed requesting that the Siskiyou County Department of Public Health make services available to the city of Weed. This was official action to back a decision made some months ago.

The council accepted $920 for street and house numbering from the state urban planning body and allocated $490 of city funds for this project.

William Hansen, city manager, reported to the council that 98,100 feet of city streets had been resurfaced, or 60 per cent of the street surfacing authorized by the council. The remaining work is to be completed this month. He also reported removal of the remaining two blocks of wooden sidewalk on Main Street had begun and replacement will be of concrete.

Feelings Make The Difference

By ANN LANDERS
Dear Ann Landers: Well, I just read another article in a magazine—probably the 500th on the same subject — "Women: How To Hang On To Your Husbands."

It's the same old palaver — let him dump his shoes and socks in the living room. It's O.K. If newspapers and cigarette ashes are dropped on the floor, so what? The same goes for m a t c h e s, toothpicks, jackets, shirts, shorts. Let him slip coffee on the rug. Just mop it up and keep smiling.

Baby him. Spoil him. Pamper him. Make him feel important. Love him to death. Make sure there's nothing left for anyone else. Keep your hair neat. Wear starchy little dresses. Be tidy at all times. And by all means be cheerful—he gets enough guff in the business world. After all, he might not be here next year.

Well, my husband may not be here next year—but there's an even better chance that I won't be here either. I'll probably be in a mental hospital.

Thanks for listening. I feel better already.—ONE OF MILLIONS
Dear One: There's a difference between doing things for a man because you love him, and being a doormat and an unwilling slave. The difference begins with how you feel about the guy. Thanks for letting me know how you feel about yours.

Dear Ann Landers: This problem is a hot potato which has been kicking around our office for months because no one knows what to do about it.

A certain girl who came to work here quite some time ago is just as pleasant as she can be. She's efficient, gets her work done early, then helps others to do theirs. But one thing about her bothers all of us. Even the men have commented on it.

She is one of those "clean on top, dirty underneath, types," as my mother used to say. Her face is always made up just so and her hair is lovely, but her lingerie straps are filthy, her slips look as if they have never been laundered and if her garter breaks she doesn't bother to sew it back on. She pins her stockings to her knees and the pins and her dirty slip show, it is revolting.

Should we accept her for her good qualities and keep quiet, or should somebody tell her? If so who — and how?—VIEW FROM THE 4TH FLOOR

Dear View: She sounds like a lovely girl who was never taught the importance of good grooming. The most tactful person in the office (and preferably an older woman) should tell her gently and in private that her shortcomings in grooming are destroying much of her charm.

Are you going steady? Making marriage plans? If so, send for Ann Landers' booklet, "Before You Marry—Is It Love or Sex?" enclosing with your request 20 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ghana Chief Critical Of Rhodesian Air Force

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (UPI)—Ghana suggested today that Portugal, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia had agreed to maintain a powerful Southern Rhodesian air force that could be used against other African countries by a "white minority" government soon to be given independence by Britain.

"Within a week, possibly," Ghanaian Ambassador Alex Quaison-Sackey told the Security Council, "there will be transferred to the exclusive control of the Southern Rhodesian government the most powerful air force existing in Africa together with a small, but highly efficient, army recruited on a racial basis."

Quaison-Sackey said this air force was more powerful than the South African air force or the air arms of Portugal and the United Arab Republic.

He said the air force had two fighter-bomber squadrons designed for use against the natives in the "African ghetto" of Southern Rhodesia and two long-range fighter-bomber squadrons for use outside the country.

"It may be that the Southern Rhodesian government does not need these aircraft for use inside its own territory but for aggressive action against neighboring states," Quaison-Sackey said. "...if it is because the internal political situation is now so critical that the government could only maintain itself by threatening destruction with atom bombs and rockets, then surely the Security Council should investigate at once."

Quaison-Sackey said R. A. Butler, the British minister charged with negotiations on Southern Rhodesia, said there was no secret agreement with Britain for maintenance of the Rhodesian air force.

He asked British Ambassador Sir Patrick Dean whether he knew of any such agreement between Southern Rhodesia and any government, including Britain, to "bear the whole or part of this cost."

"The real issue," he said, "is whether there is an agreement between Portugal, Southern Rhodesia and South Africa to pay for the costs of this air force."

Quaison-Sackey said Southern Rhodesia's army had one all-white battalion of troops recruited from Britain and South Africa. He said there was a second all-white battalion with officers from South Africa and men from Britain. He charged that Rhodesia maintained four white territorial battalions, with officers and non-coms mainly from Britain and South Africa and reservists recruited from the territory's white settlers.

to keep your home comfortably warm

These heat exchangers, at left, cool natural gas after it has been compressed, as it is being sent from the fields to the local gas company that serves your home. This is part of the complex process by which natural gas is transmitted long distances to heat your home, cook your meals, supply you with hot water and furnish many services to business and industry. Employees and equipment of El Paso Natural Gas Company serve the 11 Western states, delivering 10 times the energy supplied by all federally financed electric power generators in the same area. The cooling process is one of many interesting steps along the way—from discovery of gas, through well development, processing, compressing, transmission and final delivery to your own neighborhood.* It all adds up to a major industry, operating for the present and future benefits of the people it serves.
