5-Card Suit To Respond

By OSWALD JACOBY
 Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

When you hold 11 high card points it is correct policy to respond with a five card suit, rather than a four carder even if you have to go to the two level. If South had followed this rule and responded with two clubs, West's three spade bid would not have embarrassed North. He could well afford to come in with four hearts and North would have become declarer at the heart slam.

As it was, the three-spade bid put pressure on North, but he came through nobly, or at least successfully. He bid four clubs on a three card suit, and jumped to six hearts after getting a raise to five.

West opened the ace of spades and after ruffing with the deuce of trumps, South went into a long huddle to plan his play. If you look at all the cards you can see that several lines of play will work, but South could not see the East-West cards.

He decided that it would be just too hard to make the hand against a 4-1 trump split, but that he would have no trouble against a 3-2 split, provided all the clubs weren't bunched in the East hand, and that West did not hold four to the jack.

After this decision play went quickly. South came to his hand with a club, ruffed a second spade in dummy, cashed dummy's king of trumps, overtook the queen with his ace, pulled East's last trump with his ten-spot, and led a club to dummy's king. West showed out and South was able to finesse against East's jack.

He would lose a spade at the finish, but the slam was made.

MacArthur Gets Masonic Medal

NEW YORK (UPI) — General Douglas MacArthur, 63, stood at soldierly attention for 15 minutes Monday to receive a medal in his suite at a New York City hotel.

MacArthur, despite his advanced age, refused to sit down during the long ceremony of presentation of the 1963 Masonic Distinguished Achievement Medal and insisted on standing at attention.

Natly dressed and looking chipper, the general, who became a 33rd degree Mason in 1947, told a small gathering: "I accept it as a symbol of those nameless thousands who have contributed to this great order."

Bachelor Finishes Furry 'Rival'

By ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann: I am a middle-aged bachelor. Several months ago I began to keep steady company with a widow. She loves cats and has two — a silver tabby and a rather fluffy one.

I never cared for cats and I resented her paying so much attention to them. On two occasions she asked me to drive her to the vets with a sick cat and it spoiled our plans for the evening.

Last week the fluffy cat was sitting in the middle of the driveway as I arrived. I was going slowly and could have stopped — but I kept right on going. Yes, I killed the cat.

My friend appeared at that moment. She became hysterical, picked up the dead cat as if it were a child and screamed for me to leave and never come back.

I'm sorry I killed her cat, but it was only an animal and I fail to see why she carried on like a maniac. My brother says if she is so nutty that she would break up our friendship over this, it's a good thing I didn't marry her. What is your opinion?—X.X.Z.

Dear X.X.Z.: What a hideous, unspeakably cruel thing! You intentionally killed your friend's little pet. In my book you are a sadistic nut who should seek psychiatric help. And take your brother along with you.

Dear Ann Landers: Two years ago when our daughter Lucille was 12 years old she began to nag me about being allowed to date. I told her she could date at 14.

To be honest with you, Lucille was a sensible, mature 12-year-old and I felt certain that two more years would see her a grown-up young lady.

Well, she will be 14 in three weeks and I realize I made a mistake. The girl is immature, undependable and untrustworthy. I've asked her repeatedly to phone me when she plans to go somewhere after school. She often "forgets" to call and I worry myself sick until she walks in at 6:30 and says she went to the library.

Her room is like a pig sty. She must be told 10 times to sew on a button or mend a hem. I get so tired of nagging her to do the supper dishes that I often do them myself.

Lucille constantly reminds me that I promised she could date at

14 and now I must keep my word. Please help me do the right thing.—FRANTIC

Dear Frantic: You've already made one bad mistake. Don't make another now.

Tell Lucille you expected her to be ready to date at 14, but she is not ready and therefore you can't allow it. Explain that privileges entail responsibilities. When she behaves in an adult and responsible manner she will be accorded adult privileges. Outline in detail what you expect of her — from A to Z. Tell her you will be watching for improvement. And give her every break.

Dear Ann: I wonder if people who are forever borrowing realize how much bother they are? I suppose an easy way to get rid of such pests is to say you don't have it. This is fine for flour and milk and butter and eggs, but what about a vacuum sweeper, a steam iron and a floor polisher which they know you do have—because they've borrowed these items before?

These people can afford the necessities. The problem is, how do I say no without alienating them? Perhaps if I were a borrower myself I would be more sympathetic but my husband taught me long ago that a borrower is a poor manager. Can you suggest a tactful out?—BORROWED OUT

Dear Out: Some people aren't irritated by borrowers, in fact they are happy to help a friend. It's apparent, however, that you are irritated. So tell them: "Sorry, but I'm through lending things." If people cross you off their lists because they can no longer use you, you haven't lost much.

POLLY'S POINTERS Time Twist

By POLLY CRAMER
 Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

DEAR POLLY—Due to arthritis, I do not have strength enough in my fingers to wind my watch, so I use a spring-type clothespin. Clip the pin to the watch stem at the small notch in the pin, and wind round and round with your finger. When it is tightly wound the pin will come, right off.—C.J.P.

DEAR POLLY—Whenever I took my little girl out of the bathtub, she kicked and screamed, as she wanted to play longer. It was almost impossible to dress her. My second child reacted the same way. One day the idea came to me to let the water run out of the tub while she was still in it. After the water is gone, she is more than willing to get out of the tub, and with no fuss.—MRS. W.R.S.

DEAR POLLY—Long-nosed tweezers are a perfect companion for your sewing machine equipment. They can be used to pull out threads stuck in the bobbin. And, when you leave your crocheting, a tiny gold safety pin fastening the last stitch will save pulling out part of the work, or of having a young "helper" do it for you.—MRS. E. J.

DEAR POLLY—My cutwork banquet cloth requires careful handling when it is laundered. I wash the cloth with mild, pure

Steps Taken To Ease Moving Burden When New Roads Oust Land Owners

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal and state governments are taking action to soften the blow suffered by the property owner who must move his home or business to get out of the way of a new highway project.

Congress last year enacted legislation authorizing the use of federal highway funds for the first time to help reimburse displaced owners for some of their moving costs.

The law provides a maximum $200 payment for residential relocation and $3,000 for business. However, the payments cannot be made unless the state passes legislation authorizing them.

The Bureau of Public Roads said that since the effective date of the law — Oct. 23, 1962 — all state highway departments have set up machinery for giving relocation advice.

19 Taken Action

And 19 states actually have taken the appropriate statutory action to authorize reimbursement for moving costs. These are: Connecticut, Hawaii, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

About half of these already have made "residential relocation" payments during the six months the program has been in operation. Payments averaged from $40 in one state to $300 in another.

(In the case of the higher average, the state must be putting up the extra $100 since federal funds cannot be used only to pay up to $200.)

In addition, information from the Bureau of Public Roads indicates that five states have made payments to business property owners since the program was authorized last October.

The business reimbursements covered 17 projects and the payments averaged statewide from $24 to $2,000.

Bureau records show that during this six month period, about 23,000 residential and business properties had to be relocated to make room for a highway going through.

This new program — to make life a little easier for the man dispossessed by the highway department — will be administered on the local level. As in the case of other aspects of the federal aid highway program, Washington supplies the money and the states decide how to divvy it up.

Monday, September 30, 1940 — Hunters who bring in their bucks before Sunday were urged to take them to the S.P. depot by 7 a.m. Sunday to be hung in a huge display for pictures at the time the Wilkie special train goes through.

Tuesday, October 1, 1940 — Going back to school with other members of the younger set will be Barbara Bigger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bigger, 1419 Conby street. Miss Bigger will resume her studies at Oregon State College where she is affiliated with Sigma Kappa.

Wednesday, October 2, 1940 — Mrs. David R. Vandenburg entertained at her home on Washington street for members of her supper club. Bridge was played with high score held by Mrs. Dick Reeder, low by Mrs. Marvin K. Lucas and traveling to Mrs. George Clark. Mrs. Lucas will entertain in a fortnight.

Thursday, October 3, 1940 — Freakish ball handling was intermingled with brilliant offensive plays last night at Klamath's Pelicans bewildered a train weary Commerce high school eleven from Portland in a lop-sided 26-6 contest on Modoc field.

Friday, October 4, 1940 — Bob Hall, employed in the mechanical department of the Oregon state highway department, has returned from a hunting trip in the Bly district. Hall and his party returned with deer from that section.

MEN AT WORK

assuring your supply of winter heating comfort

Natural gas is such a convenient heat. All you need to do is dial the thermostat to the temperature you wish. But natural gas travels through hundreds of miles of pipeline to reach your home, and to assure no interruption in your winter comfort, every foot of pipeline is regularly serviced and perfectly maintained. Special El Paso Natural Gas Company crews work in rain, snow, dust, wind and heat (often miles from other human beings) to clean, repair or replace pipelines, make delicate adjustments on complicated instruments and attend gas wells. They have built more than 15,000 miles of service roads and access roads. They grade land, cut weeds, repair landslide and wash-out damage near pipelines, and build bridges. These men occupy a vital role in bringing Energy to the West—and comfort into your home.

ENERGY FOR THE WEST

Q—The bidding has been:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Double Redou.	2 ♠
Pass	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
5 ♠	Pass	?

A—Pass. Your partner is inviting a slam and while you know there is something phony about East's takeout double, it looks as if your partner has two club losers. You also have two club losers, so the slam is not going to make against a club lead.

TODAY'S QUESTION

Instead of bidding five spades your partner bids five clubs over your four spades. What do you do in this case?
