Honduras President Exiled; Junta Picked

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI)—The armed forces which deposed and deported President Ramon Villeda Morales today named Col. Oswaldo Lopez Arellano as a one-man junta to run the country through executive decree. He was former chief of staff.

Lopez put the country under a state of siege — partial martial law — and dissolved the chamber of deputies.

An estimated 60 persons, including some civilians, were killed Thursday in clashes between troops supporting the military coup d'etat that ousted Villeda and members of the civil guard, a force described by military leaders as the president's "private army."

Some army and air force units also were said to have remained loyal to Villeda. Resistance appeared to be centered in the northwestern provincial capitals of Santa Barbara and Santa Rosa de Copan.

Warplanes supporting the coup bombed Villeda's headquarters Thursday in Santa Barbara, 100 miles northwest of here, with unannounced results.

Villeda and Modesto Rodas Alvarado, government candidate for president in the election that was to have been held a week from Sunday, were flown into exile in Costa Rica late Thursday.

Radio stations in Tegucigalpa were silent for undisclosed reasons, but the army was broadcasting from at least three provincial points.

Army broadcasts described the coup as a purely military action, meant to eliminate the civil guard and halt Communist infiltration of Honduras. They said the army had no political motives.

The broadcasts promised that the coup eventually would produce a "just electoral law" and a coalition "government of national unity." There was no immediate report of the formation of a military junta regime.

Col. Oswaldo Lopez, the army commander, appeared to be the man in charge.

The military seizure of power was Latin America's second in eight days, following the coup that deposed Dominican President Juan Bosch a week ago Wednesday.

(In Washington, the State Department said the two coups may be only the start of a series. Venezuela, Colombia, Brazil and El Salvador were mentioned as other countries where the army might seize power.)

FIREMEN IN ACTION — Firemen are shown jumping into action on a fire that blackened 40 acres of grass on Alameda Avenue Thursday afternoon. The fire started on the canal bank, but jumped Alameda into grass in front of the County Juvenile Home. Contingents from the County, Suburban, OTI, City and Kingsley Field fire departments battled the flames for three hours before subduing them.

Need Cited For Effort To Restore Range Land

Cooperation between communities and federal and state agencies in restoring overbrowsed winter ranges and the joint management of the Interstate Deer Herd by the Oregon and California fish and game commissions would go a long way toward providing Southern Oregon and Northern California "with the best herd we can have with the feed we've got."

That was the summation of a report that Ted Hyde, chairman of the Wildlife Recreation Committee of the Oregon Cattlemen's Association, delivered to legislative committees from California and Oregon which met at the Winema Hotel early this morning to hear views from ranchers, outdoorsmen, and representatives from state and federal agencies on possible methods of bolstering the Interstate Deer Herd to its former numbers.

The hearing was the final session of a two-day meeting which started at Yreka yesterday and moved to Klamath Falls today. Lawmakers are seeking to determine the best methods of improving the winter range of the mule deer herds that winter in California and summer in Oregon and to arrive at the most efficient manner to manage those herds.

Today's session was monitored jointly by Representative W. O. Kelsay, of the Oregon Interim Committee on Wildlife, and Representative Pauline Davis, chairman of the California Assembly Committee on Fish and Game, who introduced members of both legislative committees to an audience of more than 100 who appeared at the Round Table Room in the Winema Hotel to take part in the discussions.

Hyde, one of a number of people from the two states who addressed the lawmakers early today, stated that the worsening conditions of the winter range could only be improved through the diligent efforts of communities and government agencies in working together to reverse that trend.

As an example of such a program, he cited a project at Vale, Ore., where cattlemen and others met with representatives of the Bureau of Land Management and the U.S. Forest Service and, at their own expense, went to the U.S. Congress where they solicited funds for a range renewal project.

They obtained the appropriation and the program, now underway, is already showing improvement in the range in that area, he said. During yesterday's meeting in Yreka, the legislative committees considered the feasibility of forming an interstate compact to regulate the interstate herd.

Hyde spoke against the formation of such a group, pointing out that so many deer range between the two states that it is impossible to determine which ones belong to the interstate herd and which do not.

He suggested that the herds continue to be regulated by the two fish and game commissions and, in that connection, expressed confidence in the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission to work effectively with the state interim committee on wildlife.

Stanley Johnson, cattleman and user of some 80,000 acres in the middle of the winter range, told the lawmakers that the condition of the winter browse is not as critical as many observers believe. Johnson said that fresh grasses which sprout during the spring provide feed for the deer herd and take the pressure off the bitterbrush, and other forage, for some three months during the year.

In addition, in recent years, cattlemen have been moving their stock "into the open range" when the grasses begin to dry out, which has also taken more pressure off of the winter forage, he said.

Johnson also commented on a little discussed killer of forage plants.

Several years ago, Johnson said, he noted an abundance of mice had infested lands in his area. His personal observations were that the rodents stripped the covering from around the trunks of plants.

In The Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

The news today? Not much to get excited about. But yesterday there was a revolution of some sort in Honduras; down in Central America, and today we suspend diplomatic relations and cut off the foreign aid we have been extending to the Honduran government.

There was a similar ruckus in Santo Domingo the other day, and we did likewise.

Hmmmmmmmm.

If these ruckuses continue, we may be able to save a lot of money.

The dispatches this morning inform us that in the past two years we've spent $18.2 million in Honduras alone.

If you have been listening to the radio and TV reporters, you've perhaps noted that they call these affairs a COO.

A COO of this sort doesn't mean the sound made by a cooling dove. Anything but. They are using a French word that is spelled COUP but is pronounced COO.

A coup can mean almost anything in French—which, incidentally, is often referred to as the language of diplomacy. COUP means a blow, a knock, a stroke. A "coup de dent" means a BITE. A "coup de fusil" is a gunshot. A "coup de main" can mean either extending a helping hand or a slap in the face. "Tout a coup" means all of a sudden.

"Coup" you see, can mean almost anything. In diplomacy, it's a handy word.

Let's get closer home.

You may have noted that Congressman Paul A. Fino, of New York, made some nasty remarks about Oregon in a piece he had printed in the Congressional Record. In it, he said illegal betting in Oregon produces a "$250 million yearly treasury for underworld crime syndicates."

The Oregonian this morning thinks there's something fishy about Congressman Fino's figures, and offers a guess that he never heard about Portland's Dorothy McCullough Lee. It adds: "There used to be a lot of ACTION around Portland. . . . A big bookie joint (in those days) right next door to a couple of our major banks. Up the street, over a theatre, there was another one. Undoubtedly, there were many more. Chinese lotteries were everywhere, including several within a block of the police station."

"But then," the Oregonian went on to relate, "the people of Portland elected Dorothy Lee mayor. Now, Mr. Fino, a guy can't even invest a nickel here to watch the lights flash on and off on a pinball game."

The Oregonian's remarks bring up a memory.

In those bad old days, a party from Southern Oregon was doing a sightseeing tour of Portland. The party included Mac Epley, then managing editor of the Herald and News. As we were touring one of these dens of iniquity, we passed a crap table. Mac, never able to resist the temptation to wager a small sum, dropped a half dollar on the table and named his bet.

The crap table attendant pushed the four bits back with a contemptuous gesture and said with a scornful note in his voice: "Children not allowed in the place."

It took Mac YEARS to get over that awful experience.

Gun Mishap Kills Henley High Youth

A Henley High School youth was killed instantly early Thursday evening when he was struck in the chest with a shotgun blast from a 410-22 caliber rifle, which discharged as he was carrying it while driving along the diversion canal on a motor scooter.

Dead is Gerald Frederick Eisenbeiz, 16, of Rte. 1, Box 363, who had been hunting muskrats along the canal at the time of the shooting.

The accident was observed by William Bond, address unknown, who told state police that he was on the canal bank when a cloud of dust drew his attention to the youth on the motorcycle. Bond said he saw the youth fall from the cycle and remain motionless on the ground. He ran to the youth, found him unconscious, and then summoned Peace Ambulance. Bond apparently did not hear the gun discharge.

It was not until after the ambulance arrived that the fatal wound was discovered. County Medical Examiner J. Martin Adams pronounced Eisenbeiz dead at the scene of the accident, police said. Police said they could not determine whether the shotgun went off as the youth was riding on the motorcycle or did so as he lost control of the vehicle and fell off.

The youth, a junior at Henley High School, was residing with his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Baird.

Funeral arrangements are being conducted by Ward's Klamath Funeral Home.

The Feeling Was Mutual

WATERTOWN, N.Y. (UPI)—Stanley C. Peer, who runs a northern New York dairy farm, is more cautious today about bringing his cows into the barn.

In the semi-darkness early Thursday, Peer spotted a form near a fence line and thinking it was a cow went up to it. Five feet away he found it was a black bear.

Peer said the bear apparently was as scared as he was because they both ran—in opposite directions.

Waterbury, N.Y. (UPI)—An estimated 250,000 gallons of precious petroleum products were lost. A 5,000-gallon storage tank was destroyed and many 55-gallon drums of gasoline, oil and prop-jet fuel stored along the beach were washed away. Much of the fuel was used by Wien Alaska Airlines.

Water rationing began for the community of 1,500 after the Air Force said the water supply, already skimpy at best, was in danger of contamination by sea water and fuel oil.

Gov. William A. Egan promised all the aid the state can give.

Temperatures were below freezing when the storm hit and at 6 p.m. (AST) Thursday it was still two degrees below freezing. Barrow, about five miles south of Point Barrow, is not accessible by land and an air lift of supplies to the stricken village seemed risky.

Freezing Storm Plagues Town; Water, Fuel Short

BARROW, Alaska (UPI)—Water was rationed and at least two dozen families of this village on the shores of the Arctic Ocean were homeless following an arctic storm with freezing winds up to 80 miles an hour.

"It's been a helluva busy day for everyone here," said State Sen. Eben Hopson after the storm roared over Thursday. "We're pooling our resources to save whatever we can."

A bulk oil tank containing 120,000 gallons of fuel oil was picked up and tossed about 400 feet by the storm.

Waves 15 to 25 feet high were churned up and crunched 12 houses along the beach to bits. Another 12 were seriously damaged.

Four feet of water surged over some streets and the Wien Alaska Airlines tower collapsed like a crumpled match box in the high winds.

International Highway Boosters To Meet Here Briefly Saturday

An organization which is stumping to have Highway US 97 designated as the Pan American Highway will be in Klamath Falls in force, Saturday, Oct. 5, for a no host banquet at the Winema Hotel, beginning with a reception at 7 p.m. and a dinner following at 8 o'clock.

The group is the Okanogan Cariboo Trail Association — believed to be the only international highway association in the world — which will meet here briefly Saturday before going on to its annual convention slated for Reno Sunday and Monday.

Arrangements for the dinner have been made through the local chamber of commerce. Everyone interested in the future of U.S. 97 is invited to attend and meet members of the association which seeks to establish the road as the principal traffic artery linking Mexico, the United States, Canada and Alaska.

Those desiring to attend the festivities are requested to make reservations with the Winema Hotel. Tickets may be purchased at the hotel during the evening of the banquet.

The program will feature brief comments from Jim Monteith, president of the chamber of commerce, and Mayor Robert Veatch, who will welcome the association to the city. In response to the welcoming, H. Max Smith, of Kamloops, Canada, president of the association, will address the dinner guests with some brief remarks.

Entertainment will be provided by two barbershop quartets, one featuring all male singers and the other all women.

Early Sunday, the entourage will proceed to Reno, stopping en route at Alturas where a breakfast is scheduled in its honor from 9 through 11 a.m. Members of the association will begin arriving in Reno at noon to register for the business sessions which will conclude with a banquet the following evening.

The OCTA says it has been largely instrumental in bringing about a number of improvements on Highway 97 in recent years and has worked diligently to promote that thoroughfare as the Pan American Highway.

The importance of this step to every community on Highway 97 can be judged by the fact that it has taken 10 years of persistent promotion to double the number of summer travelers crossing the border at Oroville, near the boundary of Washington and British Columbia.

The Pan Am proposal has been endorsed by the Washington Good

Storm Hits Tip Of Cuba

MIAMI (UPI) — Hurricane winds hit the eastern tip of Cuba today as Hurricane Flora drifted slowly northward and regained some of the power it lost in a punishing blow at Haiti.

The Miami Weather Bureau said the storm's center should cross the southern coast of Cuba's Oriente Province — near the big U. S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay — with top winds of 125 miles an hour during the afternoon.

Winds of hurricane force — 75 m.p.h. or greater — began hitting the southeastern tip of Cuba before noon.

At 11 a.m., the Miami Weather Bureau located the storm's center about 40 miles south-southwest of Guantanamo Bay, it was moving slowly toward the northwest at about 7 miles per hour.

Big 3 Near Space Ban Agreement

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Big Three foreign ministers ended their talks here with an announcement Thursday night that they were agreed in principle on banning nuclear weapons in space orbit.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, who will confer Thursday in Washington with President Kennedy, said he believed the understanding could be put in formal shape very soon.

American officials said it probably would take the form of a joint declaration and undoubtedly would be discussed with Gromyko during his call at the White House.

"Agreement on policy" was announced by Secretary of State Dean Rusk, Gromyko and British Foreign Secretary Lord Home at the conclusion of a two-hour discussion of East-West problems at the Third Avenue headquarters of the British delegation to the United Nations.

Britain is not directly involved in the problem, since the United States and Russia are the only countries now having the capacity to orbit space vehicles. However, Home wanted to endorse the agreement as a further indication of East-West progress in easing tension following the nuclear test ban agreement.

U.S. Severs Relations With Nation

WASHINGTON (UPI)—All U.S. relations with Honduras were suspended today and officials faced the problem of what to do about the second military regime to appear in Latin America in nine days.

As in the military takeover of the Dominican Republic on Sept. 25, all U.S. aid disbursements to Honduras have been halted and the new regime has not been recognized by the United States.

The State Department was withholding, probably until later today, an official announcement of suspension of relations and aid, but officials said this was done automatically when the Honduran regime fell.

The State Department fought a losing battle to prevent the Honduran coup. It even sent a high-ranking military figure there in an attempt to dissuade leaders of the Honduran armed forces.

On Wednesday — the day before troops surrounded the palace of Honduran President Ramon Villeda Morales and sent him into exile—Maj. Gen. Theodore F. Bogart, commander of the Army sector of the U.S. Caribbean Military Command in Panama, was rushed to Tegucigalpa.

Bogart met secretly with Col. Oswaldo Lopez, head of the Honduran armed forces, and stated in the "strongest terms" that the U.S. government opposed the planned coup. He emphasized that U.S. military officials shared this view.

Earlier, U.S. Ambassador Charles R. Burrows had voiced similar objections. But there had been indications Honduran military leaders somehow thought U.S. military men would support them.

Woman Dies In Accident

TULELAKE — A Tulelake woman was killed early this morning when her car ran off Highway 139 and rolled over three times, throwing her out of the vehicle.

The highway patrol said Mrs. Laura Olivia Thurston died instantly when she was ejected from the car to the ground. A highway patrolman noted in his report that the woman had not been wearing a seat belt.

CHP officers said the 45-year-old woman was driving south alone when she lost control of her auto 4 1/2 miles south of here at 12:10 a.m.

Funeral arrangements are pending at Kerr Mortuary in Alturas.

Mrs. Thurston was the wife of Ted Thurston who vanished about a year ago from Tulelake and who is listed as a missing person.

Authorities today were attempting to locate Mrs. Thurston's daughter.

Estimates Give New York Slight Edge In Population

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Census Bureau reported today that preliminary estimates indicated that New York still is slightly ahead of California in population. But one statistician said the race was so close "you might just as well flip a coin."

The bureau report estimated that on July 1 New York's population at 17,708,000 — just 118,000 more than that of California.

A bureau statistician stressed that the margin or error in the estimate was such that a correction could reverse the standings. He said a continuation of the present trend would put California ahead next year.

Gov. Edmund Brown of California claimed his state passed New York late last year.

The bureau said its margin of error results mainly from the fact that it had to do considerable estimating on migration during the 12-month period covered.

The current estimate showed that Pennsylvania was third with a population of 11,424,000 and Texas was fourth at 10,323,000.

Great Train Robbery Described In Court By 'Frightened' Engineer

AYLESBURY, England (UPI)—The engineer of the mail train that was looted of $7.3 million in the greatest robbery in history told a court hearing today that he was terrified that wild night two months ago.

Engineer Jack Mills testified that "I was very frightened" when he told how he was forced to move the engine and two mail cars of the Glasgow - to London mail train along the tracks in the darkness of Aug. 6.

He gave his testimony at a preliminary hearing of charges against 15 persons in connection with the great train robbery at nearby Cheddington.

Mills said he grappled with one of the robbers after his train had been halted by a faked red signal. He said he was struck on the head by another bandit.

"The next thing I remember I was on my knees," he said. "The cab was full of men... they all had staves."

He said they told him to move the engine, which with two coaches had been uncoupled from the rest of the train, "or you will get some more." Mills said, "I did what I was told."

Farther down the track he was told to stop the engine and was handcuffed to his fireman, David Whitby, while the mail bags were unloaded by the gang, which he estimated to number about 15.

Whitby testified that after the train stopped because of the red signal, he saw a man by one of the coaches and asked him, "What's up mate?" He said he was pushed down an embankment by the track and told by one of the gang, "If you shout I will kill you."

After the gang had left, another train came along from the opposite direction and its fireman helped the handcuffed pair to get the mail train to Cheddington station to raise the alarm.

The latest gang suspect, hair-dresser Douglas Gordon Goody, 33, was arrested Thursday night after his third round of questioning in connection with the case.

Man Listed As Missing

Tulelake police said Michael Booth of Klamath Falls left his hotel in Tulelake last Friday, saying he was going hunting. He has not been seen since.

No description of the man could be given.

Police said Booth had been working as a heavy equipment operator for Empo Land Leveling Company, which is operating near Tulelake.

They said Booth didn't take the company pickup truck he had been driving and left clothes and other personal items in the hotel room. In addition, Booth didn't pick up a pay check due him.

COURT DAYS AHEAD — A queen of the 27th annual Klamath Basin Potato Festival will be chosen from among this group of pretty lasses at the Queen's Ball in the Merrill Community Hall on Saturday night, Oct. 12. Dancing will start at 10 p.m. to Baldy's Band. Those not wearing the crown will be in the royal court. Festival days are Friday and Saturday, Oct. 25-26, in Merrill. Seated at left is Dee Harris, Melin; right, Susan Russell, Tulelake. Standing, left to right, Nondice McFall, Bonanza; Carol Lee Haskins, Merrill; Sheryl Thurman, Henley, and Mickey Wolff, Chiloquin. Whyl's Ladies Apparel will present the queen's gown again this year, a tradition of more than 20 years.
