

WILD RIDE — An automobile got away from its driver Friday afternoon as she was attempting to park it on an incline in the 600 block on Washington. The vehicle jumped the curb, bounced over a second curb next to the sidewalk, crossed the walk, took out a picket fence (left photo), crossed a small lawn taking shrubs and flowers with it, went through a second fence, went down a hill into a second yard tumbling over two retaining walls, and finally came to a halt three feet from the rear of a house (right photo). Police said the car is owned by Clarence and Ines Ayers and was driven by their daughter-in-law, Carol Lee Ayers. Both women were in the car during the wild ride, but police said apparently neither was injured. Carol Lee Ayers told police that she parked the car and was attempting to set the brake. The brake would not hold and the car jumped the hill and started its journey before she could control it. The car passed through the property owned by Bertha Hagemann, 624 Washington, and stopped in the backyard of A. R. Hayden, 636 Washington.

Pair Held In $80,000 Bank Robbery

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Two men, including a guard who previously claimed he was a "hostage," were arrested separately Saturday for the $80,000 robbery of a Torrance, Calif., area bank—one of the largest bank robberies on record in West Coast history. A third suspect was still being sought.

About $25,000 in cash, as well as $45,000 in unissued traveler's checks and savings bonds, was recovered with the arrest of Raymond Arthur Vigneau, 26, Lomita, authorities said.

Vigneau was arrested at a roadblock at Buellton, about 25 miles north of Santa Barbara, less than 24 hours after the holdup Friday of the Pacific State Bank.

Apprehended here was Jorge Velasco, 25, a janitor at the bank who said after the holdup that he was forced to help the halloween masked bandits. Vigneau, however, implicated Velasco when he was arrested.

Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) agents said Vigneau's wife, Charlene, called them and reported her husband showed her a "suitcase full of money" and then fled in her car.

Investigators indicated Mrs. Vigneau told them her husband asked her to accompany him, but she rejected his plan.

The holdup itself was carefully planned, leading to the suspicion an inside man was part of the robbery team, detectives said. Velasco had informed investigators that he was held hostage by two gunmen who forced him to let each employ into the building as they arrived for work Friday. The robbers then led tellers to their cages, forcing them to give up reserve cash, before tying the victims. When the time lock on the bank's vault actuated it, the gunmen forced the manager and assistant vice president, Keith H. Pischel, to open the safe.

Two '5-Year' Proposals Offered By Local Group

representatives of the Oregon State Fish and Game Council, but for different reasons.

Wardell, representing private property owners holding some 1.2 million acres of land, protested that the antlerless hunts occurred during the peak of the fire season. As a result, KFPA was required to patrol the lands of its members to protect the property against possible fires caused by hunters.

The expense of maintaining such patrols is incurred by the membership, and, under the circumstances, is unfair, Wardell said. He estimated that KFPA had spent some $2,500 to maintain patrols during the special season so far this year.

C. E. Milhorn and Robert Pyle, representing the Fish and Game Council, opposed the antlerless hunts because they believed that such shoots had contributed largely to depletion of the interstate deer herd.

In addition to urging the abolition of special hunts, Milhorn advocated that the State Game Commission adopt a program for validating deer tags and also urged that fees received by the commission from hunting licenses and deer tags be used for game purposes only. Sixty per cent of all revenues collected by that commission are used for activities relating to fishing, it was said.

Milhorn also objected to publicity released to news media by the commission which stated that deer track counts are "facts." Such figures are merely "estimations" of the number of deer in any area and are not facts, he said.

Pyle requested the lawmakers accept one of two proposals offered by the 800 members comprising the Klamath County chapter of the council. First, he proposed that two game refuges—one near Quartz Mountain and the other in the former Klamath Indian Reservation—be established and, also, that elsewhere no bucks smaller than a forked horn be designated legal game. He suggested further that the proposed two points remain in effect for five years, at the end of which time the legislature should "take a look at the effects."

The alternative proposal was for the legislature to close the deer season for three years in an area from Silver Lake south to the California border in order that the herd could increase to its former size.

Another hunter, Arthur Parkhurst of Keno, told the lawmakers that he knew of 10,000 acres of good bitter brush in the county. "Why hasn't it been eaten? I'll tell you why. It's because there aren't any deer," he said.

Parkhurst then expounded a theory as to why some forage plants are browsed more frequently than others. In the spring the deer go to those high plateaus first touched by the sun and feed on those plants which first become free of melting snow. Because of that reason those plants are browsed too heavily, and as a result they frequently are unable "to come back."

Bill Marshall, a local rancher and vice president of the Oregon Cattlemen's Association, said that each group should attempt to understand the problems of the others. If this is done "we can work this out," he said. Marshall also said he was troubled that the public isn't aware of the contributions that the ranchers make to the public in providing range for the deer during winter.

If the program proceeded smoothly throughout the session, it was disrupted at least once. That disruption came in the form of M. Gigler, who addressed the committees as an interested citizen.

Gigler berated the Oregon Committee, the Bureau of Land Management, and the U.S. Forest Service for "permitting public lands to be overgrazed by cattlemen."

"There's proof of it. Anybody can see it," he said. Gigler also charged that the committees had not sought the views of the "everyday citizen" on the deer issue. Representative W. O. Kelsay of the Oregon Committee finally told Gigler to yield his seat to another speaker from the audience.

"You've had no one here representing the public. It isn't fair," Gigler said, standing up from the special chair placed in front of the committees.

"We'll be back early next year and you may talk as long as you like," Kelsay replied. "You always say that, but you never do," Gigler snapped.

"We would be happy to have you continue, Mr. Gigler, but we haven't time today," Kelsay repeated placatingly. Gigler moved back toward the chair to reseat himself and debate the issue even further. When Representative Kelsay noted that Gigler was about to return to the chair facing the committee he placed one hand on his head and pointed to the rear of the hearing room with the other, shrieking, "No, No—Go!"

Gigler stood up, haltingly, and retreated reluctantly into the audience.

State Rep. Carrol Howe, who is also an authority on Indian artifacts and lore will be guest speaker. All members are urged to attend and to take a visit. There will be refreshments. Visitors are welcome. Al Angel is president.

Flow Of Water To Halt Oct. 10

Irrigation water in the main canal of the Klamath Irrigation Project will be turned off for the winter on Oct. 10, a tentative date depending on precipitation in the meantime. District Manager Ray L. The conclusion date was set by the district board of directors at a meeting Oct. 4.

wheat they have bought. That will be the equivalent, in practice, of actually exchanging their gold for our wheat.

It will amount to the same thing because when the Russians buy American paper dollars (in London or elsewhere) and use them to pay for the wheat they will mean that they will then be just that many FEWER dollars outstanding that we will eventually have to buy back WITH GOLD.

Since we won't have to use our GOLD to buy back our dollars, we will have just that much more gold left.
