

JFK Expects Progress In World Trade Talks

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy said today the new round of trade negotiations scheduled for next spring could lead to free world trade expansion "in all products and in all directions."

He gave his rosy assessment of the outlook for the so-called "Kennedy round" of negotiations in the seventh annual report to Congress on the trade agreements program.

The report covers trade and tariff developments in 1962. In a letter transmitting the report, Kennedy said the United States would "continue to press for removal of all restrictions that hinder our exports."

"It will also continue to follow a national policy of self-restraint in the use of restrictions and of confidence in the intentions of our trading partners to do the same," the President added.

Kennedy said forthcoming negotiations could help deal with the problem of "agricultural protectionism and the dilemma of hunger and glut. They can turn trade into a more effective tool of economic growth for the developing nations."

During the period covered by the report, Kennedy said: —Free world trade continued to expand with exports climbing to a record $124 billion with United States exports reaching a new high of $29.9 billion — $4.5 billion more than its imports.

—There was a further freeing of trade in agriculture, helping U. S. farm exports to hold their own at the $5 billion mark.

—The needs of the less developed countries in their trade relations received more attention than ever before.

The report listed barriers to U. S. trade that were eliminated or reduced in 1962. It also noted import controls remain in many countries, "although U. S. products have greater access to world markets today than at any other time since World War II."

"Every nation maintaining old barriers or imposing new ones has a reason for doing so, but all nations, including our own, will benefit more from the expansion of trade than from restrictions that curtail trade," Kennedy said in his letter.

Viet Nam Says Student Overthrow Try Smashed

SAIGON, Viet Nam, (UPI)—The Vietnamese government today claimed it had smashed another student ring working to overthrow the government under Communist Viet Cong orders.

The government-controlled Viet Nam press said the leader of a group called the "League of Free High School and University Students of Viet Nam," Phan Xuan Hoang, 29, has been arrested by government security agents.

The report did not give the date of arrest.

Saturday the agency said police had rounded up 17 student leaders for distributing propaganda leaflets attacking the Ngo family regime and calling for a general student strike.

"Hoang had been chosen by the Viet Cong's Saigon-Cholon-Gladfield special zone committee to direct a subversive movement among science students since early last school year. He was ordered to set up the students league a month ago," the agency said.

The government said when police arrested Hoang, identified as a first-year student in Saigon

University's faculty of science, they seized nine documents revealing "the organization's subversive plans and activities."

The agency said the students "had made up and spread lies that the government destroyed prayer books and statues of Buddha at the pagodas."

The student propaganda also charged the government had "liquidated monks and nuns, burnt university students with acid and looted money from the pagodas," the agency said.

The student organization attempted to make its propaganda more forceful, Viet Nam press said, with statistics charging that police had "arrested up to one million people and killed 6,000."

"In seeking to get the capital population to join the 'front for the liberation of the south,' the Communist-led students' league had used not only slogans such as 'independence,' 'democracy' and 'peace,' but also 'neutrality,' it said.

Police sources said the government now feels it has stamped out as thoroughly as it can the underground student movement.
