

Payments By Refuge Reported

ALTURAS—Chester Markley, manager of the Modoc Fish and Wildlife Refuge, has reported that during the 1963 fiscal year Modoc County has been paid $10,012 on land receipts in lieu of taxes.

A government directive last week pointed out that the Modoc refuge is second only to the Malheur refuge in money paid back into the county coffers from among refuges of the Pacific Coast, southwest, north central, and northeast regions.

Landwise, the 5,966 acres of the Modoc refuge is one of the smaller refuges of the regions. The revenue is obtained from grazing permits for 2,500 head of cattle, 4,346 tons of hay sold to permittees, two bee raising permits, and the sale of gravel to the county, the total income of the refuge was $40,051.50, of which Modoc County received 25 per cent.

At the time of the sale of the Dorris ranches to the Wildlife Service, many people felt a revenue to the county would decrease $6,000 in yearly taxes paid by the ranchers.

"I thought the people would like to know of this payment. I understand there was considerable local concern that the refuge would not pay its way when it was lifted from the tax rolls a few years back," Markley said.

Recuperating From Surgery

TULELAKE — George Birtwistle, State Farm Insurance representative who suffered a critical stroke some months ago while attending a convention of the organization in Arizona, submitted to lengthy surgery in the Veterans Hospital in Palo Alto recently.

Reports reaching Tulelake indicate he is recuperating as well as can be expected following 13 hours of surgery for removal of a brain clot.

Club Plans Next Event

"America Meets the Challenge of World Leadership" will be the subject of the Nov. 6 meeting of the Klamath Knife and Fork Club. The dinner session will be at 6:45 in the Winema Motor Hotel.

The speaker, Dr. R. C. "Scottie" Young, is reported by the United States Chamber of Commerce "to be one of the 10 most sought after speakers in America."

He was born in Scotland, served with the Gordon Highlanders in World War I, came to America following the war, worked as a laborer, put himself through college and graduate school in the area of philosophy, has been a college professor and administrator for many years.

His is an American story, inspirational and motivating. Reservations should be made to TU 4-8881.

Like many other singers, Metropolitan opera star Richard Tucker pedals a bike to keep fit. He and his three sons pedal near their Great Neck, L. I., home.

Wait for it!

Better Grades — 27 Learn How To Cram — Just In Case

By The Reading Laboratory
Written for Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

We've discussed the best ways of reviewing for an exam. If you've been keeping up with your studies, you won't have any problems; all you'll have to do is to refresh your memory a bit. Start to review well in advance so there won't be any pressure on you and you'll have time to be thorough. An orderly system of daily study is the best way to prepare.

But let's assume you've gotten yourself stuck. You've let your studying slide, a test is coming up, and you don't have time to review properly. You've got two choices: panic, give up and take a low mark—or cram and survive.

Every student should know how to cram. Hopefully, your studying will always be systematic, and you'll never have to cram. But should the occasion ever arise when you're really stuck, cramming may be the only way out.

When you cram, there are a couple of factors in your favor: the length of the text and your ability to overview a textbook. Paradoxically, the more material there is to cover, the better off you are. Remember, while you're wondering how to study at all, your teacher is wondering how he can construct a one-hour (or even two-hour) test that will include all of the important material.

Put yourself in your teacher's place, and you'll see he hasn't much choice. If there's a lot of material and he wants to test you on all of it, he'll have to construct a test that will just hit the highlights of each important section you were supposed to study. He may throw in a detail or two, but in the main he'll have to stick to highlights. Remember this when you cram.

Let's say you've got an hour to cram. Take your textbook and overview. Just read the bold print and the chapter summaries. Cover everything this way. Then, if you've still got some time left, you can go a little deeper into the sections you think are the most important, or the ones that you think your teacher is most likely to test. Get an idea of the general organization of the material. If you know that, you'll be able to do a lot of intelligent guessing.

Don't make the mistake of putting all your eggs in one basket. Some students spend their cramming time getting just one section down pat—in the hope the teacher will concentrate on it. That's a pretty risky proposition.

If there are a lot of details involved, ignore them. You can't learn a maze of detail in an hour or two; you'll just get confused and frustrated. Worry about the main ideas and the details will take care of themselves.

And if you have the chance, don't be afraid of playing the parasite. If a friend of yours has been taking good notes, see if you can borrow them. A real friend will be glad to help you out. Don't make a habit of borrowing notes though, or you may start to run out of friends.

Learn how to cram, and then avoid the necessity of cramming as much as possible. By studying every day, you'll learn a good deal about the material and the tests will be easy. By cramming, you'll probably pass the tests, but you won't learn anything—and it is nerve-racking.

Next: How to take a test.
