Finesse Vs. Drop

By OSWALD JACOBY
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

North had a mighty good hand and became really exuberant when his partner responded one spade to his opening club bid. As a result South found himself in six spades before he had a chance to catch his breath.

West opened the king of hearts and shifted to a low diamond. South won in dummy and led the queen of spades. East played the seven spot and after a little thought South went up with the ace and lost his slam.

South made the usual complaint about bad luck, but North seemed to think that South had taken the wrong play. North was correct. When you hold a 10-card suit you should finesse for the king.

This isn't anything brand new or world-shaking. I imagine that several million bridge players know this, but I wonder if many of them know just how much better the finesse is than the drop.

Here are the exact figures from "Oswald Jacoby on Gambling": 37 per cent of the time the king will be guarded in back of the ace and no play will work. Thirteen per cent of the time the king will be singleton in front of the ace and the drop will work and the finesse will lose. Thirty seven per cent of the time the king will be guarded in front of the ace and the finesse will work and the drop won't.

Thus the finesse works half the time exactly as you would expect. The drop play works 25 per cent, or only about one quarter of the time and is really inferior.

Q—The bidding has been:

 1 ♠ Pass 2 ♠ Pass
 Pass 2♥ 3♦ 3♥

You, South, hold:

What do you do?
 A—Bid four clubs. You don't plan to go to game, but you want to complete further and in case the opponents bid four hearts you may want a club opening.

TODAY'S QUESTION

West bids four hearts. North and East pass. What do you do now?

School Board Defends Letter

PORTLAND (UPI)—The David Douglas High School board refused Monday night to halt publication of its newsletter, "Young Schools."

The publication came under fire from some residents of the district because its October issue came out before the Oct. 15 tax election and contained an article on the referendum election by State Rep. Richard Eymann, D-Marcola. Eymann was the sponsor of the tax program. Opponents questioned the legality of the school board publication and were upset over what they said was a one-sided presentation of the issue.

"We think it is a good way to inform the people," said Supt. Floyd Light. He said the publication will continue unless someone proves it is against the law.
