WALL STREET

NEW YORK (UPI)—Profit taking in electronics and some bad news for the drug industry helped break a string of four successive advances in stock prices today.

Sizable losses in Merck, Johnson & Johnson, Colgate, Peoples Drug, and Sterling reflected new evidence of price fixing in the drug industry termed "so rapacious as to make the infamous international cartels of the 1930s blushing novices by comparison."

Training Programs Urged For Victims Of Automation

ployment officer for Klamath County, told the committee that as automation became more firmly entrenched in the county there was also a corresponding decrease in the number of itinerant farm laborers who migrated to the Klamath Basin for the annual potato harvest.

"At this time supply and demand are very nearly equal during the harvest," Sysma said. Apparently there will be a sufficient supply of labor to harvest the potato crop in forthcoming years, it was foreseen.

Sysma was primarily concerned with finding employment for youth, which represents the largest group of unemployed in the county, he said. Large numbers of young people under age 25 leave the county annually because there are no jobs available for them, Sysma added.

He said further that the best means to alleviate that and some other labor problems would be to induce into the area new industry which does not follow the same seasonal pattern as the timber industry and others similarly related.

Sysma cited some observations of the national employment picture. The number of unskilled jobs per industry is decreasing in Klamath Falls as it is elsewhere in the nation, but the number of semi-skilled and skilled workers is increasing here at a much lower ratio as in most other parts of the United States.

Clearly a technological training program for youths and those eased out of jobs by automation was indicated.

But who should accept the responsibility for maintaining such programs? Should it be industry, or the state and federal governments?

Sysma believed that this should depend upon the availability of jobs and the resources of the industry in question. If the particular industry is financially able, it should retain its disassociated workers for other jobs. Otherwise, the state or federal governments should take up the slack, he said.

In any case, some type of continuing technological training program is vital. Because of the continual changing technology in industry, jobs which have come into existence recently may not exist 15 years from now, he said.

In discussing the timber industry, Sysma stated that the labor force in that field has dropped from 4,477 in 1947 to 2,769 for 1962. Conversely, the plywood business within that industry has increased from 78 to 203 workers for the same years.

Most of the 1,600 no longer in the timber industry have been absorbed into other services and businesses within the area. The total effect has been a slight decrease in the labor force within the county and an increase in the non-working group, such as children and senior citizens.

In other comments on the industry, Jim Cavanaugh, representing the Weyerhaeuser Timber Company, remarked that the availability of new machinery would eventually replace the migrant worker. He advocated that a training program be introduced here to teach local people how to operate potato harvesting equipment when that time arrives. Migrant farm workers now working in the harvest are frequently woefully lacking in that experience, he said.

The committee is seeking to study the effect of automation throughout the state in order that lawmakers may adopt legislation to insure that workers who are displaced by changing technologies may be channeled into other industries.

Comprising the committee are Sens. Don S. Willner, Arthur P. Ireland, Alfred H. Corbett, Ted Hallock and Reps. Richard L. Kennedy, Fred Meek, Wayne Turner and Howard Willits.

ery and improved techniques of operations in the woods has brought about the reduction of its crews.

In addition, trucks are now capable of removing timber from areas once accessible only to logging trains, with the result that such railroads are now obsolete and the large crews formerly required to maintain them are no longer needed.

Automation has resulted in an increase in personnel in one phase of Weyerhaeuser's operation, Cavanaugh said. He cited that 160 people are employed in the box plant compared to the 100 working there in earlier years.

He pointed out that the timber industry, as other businesses, are continually seeking job applicants with more mechanical skills as the technology in that field becomes more and more complex.

To keep abreast with that changing technology, Weyerhaeuser urges its employees to take special correspondence courses so they may learn how to use new and more technical equipment. If an employee completes such a course, "Weyerhaeuser substantially pays for it," Cavanaugh said.

He stated that there is a need for graders and mechanics in the timber industry and added that Weyerhaeuser is relying more on the Oregon Technical Institute for obtaining skilled employees.

Some views of the potato industry came from Blackman, who reflected that approximately 70 per cent of potato harvesting is now done by machinery. Numerous improvements in the processing and packaging of the vegetable has benefited the consumer in that now smaller amounts of potatoes are available in better containers to the consumer.

Blackman told the committee that a processing plant in the area might serve to keep the potato industry in the Klamath Basin, but he doubted that the farmer would "realize any more profit in the end." The possibility exists that such a plant would serve to stimulate the industry, he reflected.

Blackman believed that machinery would eventually replace the migrant worker. He advocated that a training program be introduced here to teach local people how to operate potato harvesting equipment when that time arrives. Migrant farm workers now working in the harvest are frequently woefully lacking in that experience, he said.

The committee is seeking to study the effect of automation throughout the state in order that lawmakers may adopt legislation to insure that workers who are displaced by changing technologies may be channeled into other industries.

Jury Finds Dairy, Producers Sign Milk Supply Agreement

A Circuit Court jury of four men and eight women took just a half-hour Tuesday afternoon to find Clayton Spencer Schultz, 21, guilty of assault with a dangerous weapon.

The 11-1 verdict was returned at 2:30 p.m. in the court of Judge Donald A. W. Piper and a poll of the jurors reviewed the 11-1 vote. Judge Piper set Friday for sentencing Schultz. He was accused of threatening Richard Krieg with a knife last July 11.

Murder Trial Opens Here

John Wesley Dean, 57, went on trial in Circuit Court this morning on a charge of second-degree murder arising from the fatal stabbing of his brother last July in Klamath Falls.

A jury of nine men and three women was originally drawn from the panel. One male juror was excused because of his friendship with the defendant and another was excused because of his friendship with police officers. Their places were filled by one man and one woman.

Shortly before noon, the defense had exercised two preemptory challenges and the prosecution one and the selection of a jury was expected to be completed this afternoon.

Dean is charged with stabbing Hagan Dean, 37, July 8. The younger brother was stabbed in the throat and lived five days after the incident. Witnesses said the stabbing occurred during a scuffle between the brothers in front of the defendant's residence, 504 1/2 South Fifth Street.

'Y' Slates Family Night

YMCA Family Night will be held Friday, Nov. 1, at 6:30 p.m. Featured for the after dinner entertainment will be the Pelican Pipers, a new women's barbershop singing group under the direction of Alice Michels. Their selections will be "Bye, Bye, Blues," "Til There was You," "I Believe" and "Are You From Dixie?"

Family Night is now open to both members and non-member families. For the potluck supper, all families are asked to bring a hot dish and either salad or dessert, plus table service and children's beverage. Coffee is provided. After dinner recreation will be available in the pool and ping-pong room, gym and on the trampoline. Those planning to attend are asked to call the YMCA and make table reservations.

William Sveund of Dorris, Calif., reported to police Tuesday night that a tool box valued at $70 was stolen from his pickup truck, which was parked on Broad Street near Elm Street.

Eldred Hansen, chairman of the county committee, will introduce the congressman.

Advertising Executives Will Convene In Klamath

A group of 35 newspaper advertising executives are expected in Klamath Falls Thursday for the opening of the 57th semiannual convention of the Pacific Northwest Newspaper Advertising Executives Association.

A. D. "Deb" Addison, advertising manager of the Herald and News, is convention chairman.

Registration and reception for members is set for Thursday at 8 p.m. at the banquet room at the Winema Motor Hotel.

William B. Sweetland, Herald and News publisher, will open the convention activities with an address of welcome at 9:05 a.m. Friday.

Frank A. McGirt, vice president of the organization, is program chairman and a series of interesting speeches and panel discussions is set for the visiting groups.

Glenn Jackson, vice chairman of the Pacific Power and Light Company, will be guest speaker at the Friday noon luncheon.

Del Jackson, president of PNNAEA, will preside at the Friday night banquet dinner and dance.

The convention concludes Saturday noon with a buffet luncheon.

Keynote address on Friday morning will be delivered by Paul Carter, advertising coordinator of the Spokesman Review and Daily Chronicle, Spokane, Wash.
