

Law Enforcement Officers Report No Progress Toward Solution In Prineville Slaying

PRINEVILLE (UPI) — Two boys playing along an irrigation ditch north of picturesque Smith Rocks Aug. 11 made a discovery that has touched off one of Central Oregon's most bewildering murder cases.

The boys came across a man's body, caught on a wire fence that dipped into the canal.

Identification came rapidly: Phillip Reinhardt, aged 72, wealthy Powell Butte rancher, missing from his home since the night of Aug. 3.

But 10 weeks later, county and state law enforcement officers say they are no closer to finding out who killed him than they were that day.

"We just hit a dead end," says Crook County sheriff J. T. King. "We don't know where to go."

Sgt. Lowell Hertzell, who commands the State Police office at Bend, is a little more hopeful.

"We've been slogged up a lot in our investigation," he admits, "but we're still working on our own ideas, you might say."

He disappeared on a Monday night, and on Wednesday his wife of three years, Hilda, 62, went to the police.

Her story was simple.

She and her husband had quarreled. Reinhardt, angry, prepared to drive away in one of the family's cars, she said. She blocked his exit with another vehicle and Reinhardt vanished on foot across a field.

"That was the last time anyone admitted seeing him alive," Mrs. Reinhardt, in distress, called a neighbor and her minister, Rev. D. L. Penhollow, a respected churchman and Deschutes County judge. Rev. Penhollow calmed the woman, saying her husband undoubtedly would forget his anger and come home. He suggested Reinhardt probably would be even more unhappy if he returned to find police searching for him.

But Reinhardt wasn't coming home. His skull had been fractured three times and his body had seven broken ribs. Dr. R. C. Henry, head pathologist at Oregon's State Crime Laboratory, thought the death weapon might be a hand axe.

Furthermore, Dr. Henry told Sheriff King, the body apparently had been out of the water some time before it was thrown into the canal. Reinhardt was fully clothed — except for his trousers and hat.

Shoes Worn Through
The toes of his shoes were completely worn through, apparently from scuffing on rocks as he floated down the canal. The body was found 8½ miles from his 40-acre cattle ranch southwest of the Powell Butte Post Office and store.

Investigators descended on the family ranch.

"Everything has been searched," says King. "We didn't find any weapon, no blood, nothing. There's nothing to indicate where he was killed."

Lawmen turned their attention to anyone who might have wanted the rancher dead.

"Not a soul," King says. "We can't find an enemy. He's loaned money to quite a number of different people, but he wasn't the kind that pressed anybody."

"If he didn't like you, he ignored you."

His widow told police he had $80 dollars in cash and a $100 check in his billfold when he disappeared. The check has never been cashed.

"We interviewed everyone in that area. No one had seen any transients," King recalls.

Accident Discounted
Could it have been accidental? "We don't see how," Sgt. Hertzell says.

"We have considered that he might have been struck by a car and someone panicked and threw him in the canal," says King, "but he must of laid somewhere for several hours first and it's a little hard to see anybody doing that."

How was Reinhardt killed? By whom? And where? The canal runs through three counties between the ranch and the spot where his body was found. Mrs. Reinhardt last week offered a $5,000 reward for anyone who can provide that information—if it leads to the conviction of the persons responsible.

So far there have been no takers.

Lakeview High School News Notes

LAKEVIEW — Twenty-five members of the Future Teachers Association of Lakeview High School visited the other schools in District No. 7 on Oct. 24 to share in the program arranged each year to give the students interested in teaching an opportunity to observe the methods and techniques of various teachers and to determine the grade level in which their interest lies.

Several students visited two schools and a few were at the kindergarten sessions while some students actually taught. Bob McGhehey, president of the FTA, taught social studies in the sixth grade; many helped supervise reading groups; others assisted in the supervision of physical education and playground activities; and still others passed out papers and books.

Things of particular interest to individual students were the developmental reading instruction in grade six and methods of teaching handwriting, especially to left-handed children. Another visit is planned in the spring.

Working with ceramics and oil paintings, the art classes are involved in many interesting projects. Those in ceramics have made a box, a free form dish, and will eventually make a sculptured piece. Some students are carving in the wet clay of the ceramic boxes. A design scratched in the paint is known as scroffito. Pieces not painted will be coated with a substance called engobe.

The firing process is called bisque and this is followed by glazing, with the painted boxes clear glazed and those not painted, color glazed. A large Skutt kiln was installed in the art room about two weeks ago for firing purposes. However, the department has no wheel so thrown pieces will not be possible for the present.

Installation of the electronic learning center, or language lab, is of much interest at LHS now. This consists of paired individual booths, each of which contains earphones and a microphone. It is to be used by the Spanish classes, with students learning by listening to tapes and recording through the microphone. The tape decks are controlled by the instructor through a master console in the room.

There are stations for 24 students with 12 channels so that 12 different lessons may be going at once. The language department is in the process of copying tapes provided by the textbooks company, and other instructional tapes will be made by the instructor, students, and members of the Spanish Club. A series of commercial tapes is on order.

The students can do three things, listen, respond and record. Intercommunication between students is also possible if the teacher wishes. This is also controlled at the master console.

The 16-member group of the Chorales make up an activity choir, with four sopranos, four altos, four tenors and four basses. The choir sings for clubs, assemblies and other gatherings. Sopranos are Kathryn North, Ara Lee Herbert, Diana Moyer and Marilyn McNeal; altos, Kathy Plato, Esther Evans, Janet Taylor and Jean Raughman; tenors, Ernie Fesck, Bob McGhehey, Ken Kudrna and Mike Wiggins; basses, Konrad Kratz, Aaron Osborne, Bruce Mackay and Bill Williams.

The Lakeview High School Pep Club has begun the year by appointing two new committees, one for decorations and the other to act as squad leaders for the home games. The first decorating group was made up of Sheryl Getty, Susan Hotchkiss and Jo Anne Leahy. The girls decorate the halls and put up posters for the game. The duty of the squad leaders is to take roll at games and practices and those for the past week were Janet Taylor, Jean Raughman and Marcia Flynn.

At the student council meeting on Oct. 14, it was decided that two sets of parents will be asked to chaperone the dances.

Report cards for the first nine weeks of school will be issued Wednesday, Nov. 6.
