

Caroline, John Jr. Learn Of Father's Death

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A lonely little boy who observes his third birthday Monday wandered through a big Washington house Saturday complaining, "I don't have anyone to play with."

John Fitzgerald Kennedy Jr. says his father was killed by "a bad man." But still he doesn't seem to understand why the slain President is not there to walk the White House corridors with him or why he is not allowed in the presidential offices.

It is different for Caroline Kennedy, to be six years old on Wednesday. Bright beyond her years, she seemed to comprehend death.

The children were told Friday night that their father was dead. The White House did not say who told them, but presumably it was their mother.

The two children adored their father and his deep affection for them captured the nation's imagination. He showed it all the time, even while carrying out his official duties.

The children were asleep at the White House Friday night when their daddy came home for the last time. Mrs. Kennedy had kept vigil at Bethesda Naval Hospital where the President's body was taken on arrival from Dallas, Tex.

With her was Dr. John W. Walsh, her obstetrician and close friend who saw her through the tragedy of the death of her infant son, Patrick Bouvier Kennedy on Aug. 9.

Also by her side was Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy who went to the hospital at her request. The attorney general raced up the ramp when the presidential plane arrived and took Mrs. Kennedy in his arms. She wept and told him: "Would you come with us?"

Since the assassin's bullet felled her husband, Mrs. Kennedy has remained close by

AND PRESIDENT JOHNSON
WASHINGTON (UPI)—Lyndon B. Johnson is the second President of the United States with the name of Johnson and also the second to take office because of an assassin's bullet.

Andrew Johnson became president of the United States on the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in 1865 by John Wilkes Booth.

him. In Dallas, she would not leave the door of the emergency room where he had been taken. Cradling his body in her arms, she had stroked his brow as they rushed to the hospital.

She remained in her pink blood-spattered suit, stockings and stained shoes, even when she came back to the white house.

At the Dallas hospital, she moaned softly. "Whatever are we going to do. Whatever are we going to do?"

Mrs. Johnson went to Mrs. Kennedy at the hospital and put her arms around her. In despair Mrs. Johnson uttered: "I wish to god there was something I could do."

Mrs. Kennedy pulled herself together and watched as Lyndon D. Johnson took the oath of office as the new president in the presidential plane in Dallas, and then kissed her on the cheek.

She stood for a moment, staring at the floor, fighting back the tears. Dallas Police Chief J. E. Curry went up to her took her hand, and said, "God bless you, little lady. Don't you want to go back and lie down?"

"No, thanks," she said in a firm voice. "I'm fine, really." Then she went to an alcove of the plane and remained seated near the body.

Mrs. Kennedy told close friends that she must "remain strong for a couple of days."
