SEAN
FLYNN
SAYS:

"Don't Talk to Me About Errol!"

IN 1935, Errol Flynn shot to stardom in a swashbuckling epic called "Captain Blood." Three years ago, Errol's son, Sean, then 19, was signed to star in a sequel to his father's famous movie, "The Son of Captain Blood."

The film is about to be released in the U.S. In Europe, it already has made quite a splash—and so has Sean.

I had heard he was the spitting image of his late father, if not in appearance at least in behavior, and I was curious to find out if this was true—if I could only locate him. Nobody seemed to know where he was hiding out. But, finally, after several transatlantic cables, I received this wire: "Sean can be reached c/o Yacht Zacca, Club Nautico, Palma de Majorca."

This was only the beginning of an incredible exchange of telegrams. To make sure I wouldn't fly thousands of miles for nothing, I wired Sean to confirm how long he would be in Majorca. The first response read: "Sean, si; Errol, no; in Palma until 15 August." He meant that he was willing to talk about himself but not his father.

To double check that he would be there when I arrived, I sent another cable. His reply: "Come quick or I'll get an ulcer." Before I boarded the plane, he dispatched a third wire: "Robert Burns." Unfortunately, I wasn't able to figure out that he wanted me to bring him some cigars.

I wasn't sure what Sean looked like, but when I walked out of the customs building at Palma, I instinctively knew that the six-foot, three-inch, bronzed, well-built, curly-haired guy with the cocky smile could be no one else.

He piled my luggage into the back seat of a tiny, badly smashed-up Fiat and, beckoning a gorgeous 19-year-old girl, said, "I'd like you to meet a little friend of mine." Then the three of us were off on the wildest ride I've ever taken in my life. As he maneuvered the curves on
