EXCHANGE STUDENT DONS SPACE GEAR—Mayor Robert Veatch grins lightly as Moura, wearing a parachute, peers from a helmet and mask that is standard equipment for jet fighter pilots. The mayor joined the student and others conducting the tour.

INSPECT AIRCRAFT—George May, newly elected president of the local AFS chapter, and Roberto Moura pause briefly after taking note of the dual-exhaust system of an F-101B Voodoo. The exhaust units in the background tower over the two visitors.

Future Diplomat Views Jet Aircraft

Roberto Moura, an American Field Service student from Brazil who has aspirations of entering the diplomatic corps in his native country, visited Kingsley Field Jan. 29 to inspect the articles of diplomacy used by the United States in war—the U.S. Air Force's jet interceptor and fighter aircraft.

Moura was joined on the tour by Mayor Robert E. Veatch; George May, newly elected president of the local AFS chapter; Donna May's daughter; and Mrs. Adolph Zamsky, the Brazilian's "mother."

The group toured the personnel equipment section and the maintenance control center and also observed the flight simulator in action and took a close-up look at an F-101B Voodoo interceptor.

A senior at Klamath Union High School, Moura will graduate in June and return to his home in Rio de Janeiro to study law at Catholic University.
