Sportsmen Oppose Bill Outlawing Loaded Guns

SALEM (UPI) — Sportsmen's groups and gun clubs lined up solidly today against a bill which would outlaw the carrying of loaded guns in vehicles during a hunting season.

A hearing by the Senate Fish and Game Committee was marked by a sharp outburst at one of the witnesses by Sen. Glenn Huston, D-Lebanon.

Testimony branded the bill as unenforceable, a violation of constitutional rights, unduly restrictive, and unnecessary.

Garth Stelltenpohl, Salem, president of the Oregon State Rifle and Pistol Association, contended it could be the tool for the extension of government control over the right of a citizen to bear arms.

Letters Hit Bill

Huston's remarks were aimed at Tex Shively, a one-time candidate for Marion County sheriff, who was representing the Oregon Gun Collectors and various other gun clubs. He has written several letters critical of the bill and its sponsors to Willamette Valley newspapers.

When Shively mentioned possible defeat at the polls for sponsors of such legislation, Huston struck back.

"I want to tell you I didn't sponsor this bill," he said, pointing out it was introduced at the request of the interim committee of which he was a member.

Tongue Lashing Given

"Nobody threatens me . . . if I believe in a bill I'll support it even if it means I'll be defeated . . . don't ever come up before a committee here and throw that kind of weight around."

Shively protested he wasn't thinking of Huston.

"Let's don't kid ourselves," Huston snapped. "I've seen the letters."

The bill was recommended by the interim committee as a safety measure and a device for cutting down on road - hunting and poaching.

Ban Loaded Guns

It would ban carrying a weapon with a cartridge or shell in the chamber, magazine or clip in a vehicle from three days before a hunting season to three days afterward. Peace officers, members of the armed forces on duty and perons hunting predators on their own land were exempted.

It also was drawn to exempt pistols, but opponents said they doubted it did so.

"We cannot legislate safety," Stelltenpohl contended. He said gun safety programs have caused Oregon's overall hunting accident rate to drop each year since 1959 while the amount of hunting activity has increased.

He also pointed out that Oregon already has laws against shooting game from a vehicle, discharging a weapon across a roadway, and negligent handling of firearms where persons are injured.

He contended the bill was designed to give police a method of arresting people on "suspicion of intent to commit a crime."

German Measles Lead Disease List

German measles was on the rise in Oregon last week, when 310 cases of the disease were reported in most of the state's 36 counties, the Oregon State Board of Health has reported. The incidence of the disease has increased weekly from 72 cases on Jan. 2 to the peak reported for the most recent period.

Although the disease was on the upswing in many areas of the state, Klamath County last week reported its first case since the new year.

Other figures indicated that influenza led all communicable diseases reported in the state for the last period with 320 cases, followed by German measles; measles, 61; pneumonia, 40; scarlet fever, 30, and others in lesser numbers.

The breakdown of communicable diseases in Klamath and adjacent counties during the same period follow:

Klamath, 28: Influenza, 13; measles, 11; German measles, scarlet fever, salmo. inf., and pneumonia, one each.

Deschutes, 12: Influenza, eight; scarlet fever, two; pneumonia, bac. dysentery and tuberculosis, one each.

Douglas, 18: Influenza, 12; pneumonia, four; whooping cough, two.

Jackson, 49: German measles, 31; measles, 10; influenza, six; pneumonia and infectious hepatitis, one each.

Josephine, 15: German measles, eight; influenza, six; scarlet fever, one.

Lake, seven: Influenza, five; measles, two.

The money is to be used for city street maintetnance.

New Yankee Aircraft Looks Dowdy, Flies Fast After Vertical Takeoff

DALLAS (UPI) — The XC-124A resembles a very dowdy bird. It is short, fat, and squatty. Its one touch of elegance—spats over the wheels — fails to make it handsome.

But, it flies. Like a bird.

The plane takes off like a scared quail — straight up. Then the four helicopter - like propellers flop over 90 degrees and the craft zooms away from the would-be hunters.

Two models of the $100 million hybrid with tilt wings were shown off Thursday to aviation and military officals at the Dallas Naval Ar Station.

Five of the craft have been built for military testing. Ling-Temco-Vought, prime contractor for the project, said the plane also has many potential uses for civilian duties.

LTV chief test pilot John Konrad demonstrated the capabilities of the craft. He tilted the wings and propellers of the four-engine aircraft straight up.

The squatty "heli-plane" rose 30 feet into the air. It stayed there. The four propellers whirled and the plane backed up. Konrad then nosed the controls forward and the wings slowly lowered into normal airplane position and the craft buzzed off at 200 miles an hour.

Konrad brought the plane back on front of the reviewing stand and with about 400 dignitaries watching, the wings changed from horizontal to vertical position. The mechanical monster hung momentarily in space and then landed easily.

The aircraft engineers said the plane operates more economically if a short take off run is used. The other prototype showed how.

The 58 foot long craft scooted down 50 feet of runway with the wings and engines tilted at a 45 degree angle. After the short run the plane hopped airward with the whine of its General Electric turboprops slicing the air.

Once it is in the air the pilot can shut off two of the engines. He also doesn't have to bother with a stubby propeller on the tail. It is used for balance when the craft is playing helicopter.

$100 REWARD

For the arrest and conviction of the the thief who stole on the night of Feb. 3rd or morning of Feb. 4, 1965 a four barrel Carter Carburetor (probable No. 9778965) from a 1965 Pontiac parked behind 833 Eldorado St. If more than one thief was involved there will be paid $100 reward for each of the thieves arrested and convicted.

The stolen carburetor will fit anything (probably General Motors product) that is adapted with a our barrel manifold. This car caught on fire when the owner attempted to start it and the fire caused extensive damage, it was an act of malicious destruction endangering property if not human life.

keep your eye on the competition

You do it every time you check the advertising in your daily newspaper to see what the competition is up to . . . what's on sale . . . where . . . when . . . for how much.

You learn a lot about the day-to-day state of the marketplace by reading the other fellow's advertising.

And so does the shopping public.

So use the daily newspaper to keep an eye on the competition . . . use it for market research . . . but don't lose sight of the main issue. Use it to keep yourself in the public eye with consistent, productive advertising.
