Guidelines To Discuss Boys, Girls

"Boy - Girl Relations from Kindergarten to College" will be the topic of Mrs. Hazel Todd, dean of girls at Klamath Union High School, during the second in a series of four special programs sponsored by the Roosevelt Parent-Teachers Association for the benefit of the public. The forthcoming program is slated for 2 p.m., Tuesday in the Roosevelt School cafeteria and is part of the PTA's series, "Guidelines for Grades."

Next month's session will feature Rev. Robert Groves in an address entitled, "Who is Responsible?"

In commenting on next Tuesday's program, Mrs. Charles Houston, chairman of the Roosevelt PTA project, reflected optimism that grade schools throughout the county will become interested in a similar approach to the problem of the early sophistication of children, so "that there will be a carry-over at the junior high and high school levels."

In connection with that view, Mrs. Houston has shared Roosevelt's experiences with several local PTAs and has been invited to address a group in Bend at a later date.

Anyone interested in learning more about "Guidelines" is invited to attend the Roosevelt meetings or to contact Mrs. Houston.

22 Attend Orientation

Twenty two employes of the Winema National Forest completed a two-day orientation training program, prepared and presented by local forest service personnel, on Feb. 4 and 5 in the community of the Equitable Savings and Loan Building. Represented at the session, designed for new employes and those who had not previously received the training, were personnel from the forest supervisor's office and the Klamath, Chiloquin and Chemult Ranger districts.

Discussed during the session was the national forest multiple use and sustained yield program. Foresters, clerks, technicians, engineers and business management personnel participated in the discussions.

At a Thursday evening dinner session the group heard presentations by A. B. Dickerman, president of the Klamath County Chamber of Commerce, and Leo Morstad of Leo's Camera Shop. Dickerman spoke on community affairs, while Morstad presented an illustrated talk on deer trapping and marking, release of wild turkeys, and last summer's Izaak Walton League tour through the Sky Lakes area.

The orientation is part of a continuing training program conducted by the forest service to develop greater skills in management and development of the national forest property.

Decisions Unit Holds Meeting

CHEMULT — The Chemult Great Decisions group met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Torrence for the first lesson and discussion of the study group.

Elected as moderator was Richard Williamson to head the membership of the following interested people: Jim Rousey, David Clemens, Mr. and Mrs. Kent Mays, Mr. and Mrs. J. Torrence, Mr. and Mrs. R. Williamson, Mr. and Mrs. Vern Fridley, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Harden.

The eight-week course of study will end in March.

IT PAYS TO THINK — Mrs. Roberta Negus has found it pays to think up ways to improve work procedure at the Farmer's Home Administration office. During the past 12 months she has received two awards for her suggestions, the second was given Wednesday morning by Robert Pierce, state FHA director, in the form of $175. Pictured above from left is Jack Hert, county supervisor for the FHA, witnessing Mrs. Negus' award acceptance from Pierce.

THE SQUIRREL CAGE

By Douglass Welch

A good day to you all, and particularly to persons whose navels are off-center because I sympathize with them.

I don't like to bother you with my personal problems, but my navel has been giving me trouble again. I checked in the full-length bathroom mirror last night, and it is off-center again. The fact that most person's navels are off-center doesn't console me much. It bothers me to be walking down the street, pointed in one direction while my navel is pointed in another.

You see, I was taking this exercise to get it lined up, and for a while it was perfect. And then, I guess, I just got careless. When you have a wandering navel, you've got to watch it every minute.

You remember I told you in this column some time ago how I made the dreadful discovery that my navel was off-center. I read where this doctor said everyone's navel was off-center at one time or another, and that a majority of persons' navels were off-center all the time. Well, I checked mine, and I found it was all too, frightfully true.

I went to the local hardware store and asked for a plumber's bob, or whatever they call it—a weight on the end of a string, and the clerk said: "What do you want it for? Going to do a little building around your place?" And I said: "No, I want to hang it down from my nose and check in the mirror whether my navel is off - center." And he said: "Well, it serves me right. I shouldn't have asked you." And I said: "It's the truth." And he said: "Now I have heard everything!"

Exercise

So then for weeks, months, actually, I did this exercise where you go "ummmph!" and throw your navel over to the side you want it. Like I would be talking to some lady at a cocktail party and she would be telling me about some dull thing that happened to her, and I would go "ummmph!" and throw my navel over, and she would say: "What's going on?" And I would say: "Well, my navel is off - center, and I believe if I contract the muscles on one side and pull it over, maybe I can retrain it." And she would walk away saying "Sheesh!" or "What a kook!" or "Gee, with these new tranquilizing drugs, they let them out early now, don't they?"

And then Green Eyes would come to the rescue, and she would say: "Everybody's navel is off-center a little. It is just that my husband is so tidy. He is a perfectionist." The funny thing is, pretty nearly everybody in the neighborhood began checking their navels, and some were shocked, to find theirs was off a good two inches from the center line.

And then I got it straightened out pretty good, it wasn't more than a quarter inch off, even after a two-dollar Italian table d'hote dinner, and I just forgot it.

And then suddenly I read that some skiers never learn to ski properly because their navels are off-center, and when you ski you are supposed to point your navel in exactly the direction you want to go!

Disastrous

There was this article called "The Pointable Navel" by Jim Lucas and Joy Lucas, a husband and wife team, of the Evergreen Ski School of Snoqualmie, Wash., which is in the Cascade Mountains. They said the navel is very, very important in proper skiing. You use it as a front sight.

"Beginning skiers," the article goes, "who are learning to traverse often have trouble because the uphill ski splits and heads uphill, away from the other ski. This makes it probable that the beginner will fall backward into the hill. To prevent this, the trick is to make sure that practically all the weight is kept on the downhill ski. A sure way to accomplish this is to point the navel down the hill. With the navel pointed down the hill, the uphill shoulder and ski are automatically advanced. . . ." And so it goes. It is easy to see, if your navel is 10 degrees off course, why, you're never going to ski well, that's all.

I don't ski but some day I might want to ski and I certainly don't want to flunk a navel-orientation test. I have already flunked ballet. I will never dance Swan Lake or Red Shoes like the other fellows can. It would be too humiliating to come running tippy-toe out on that stage and crash right into the backdrop because my navel misdirected me. Green Eyes does her best to cheer me up. She says: "Some people have one thing wrong, some another."

It costs each man, woman and child in the United States an estimated $26.31 a year to clean up litter strewn along streets and highways and in public parks, the American Automobile Association estimates.

Refuge Manager Plans To Feed Wildfowl Cereal Grains

By DICK BRIGGS

Cereal grains will be distributed on Bureau of Reclamation lands in the Tule Lake area next spring in efforts to lure wild geese to those feeding points and spare crops on adjacent farmlands from the depredations of the migrating waterfowl, it was reported to some 50 representatives of the local farming industry during a public meeting at the Henley Farm Bureau yesterday.

That pledge was issued by Robert F. Russell, manager of the Tule Lake Waterfowl Refuge, to grain and beef producers of the Klamath Basin who expressed the view that the Fish and Wildlife Service had provided "too little" assistance to them in controlling marauding waterfowl during the spring migrations.

Experimental Basis

The promise to distribute the grains was extended on an "experimental basis," provided that crops in the Klamath Basin were being ravaged by the migrant birds. Russell said that research conducted by the bureau had indicated that whenever snow covered the refuge's grain fields the geese would move onto private lands to feed on the "cull potatoes" used for planting or as feed for cattle.

Russell said that the coming of snow would move the Wildlife Service to action in setting out the cereal grains to lure the wildfowl away from crops on private farmlands.

The refuge manager's appraisal of the situation was challenged by James L. Lane, Klamath County Farm Bureau, who stated that the geese occupied fields under cultivation with the cull potatoes under any and all weather conditions.

Lane then urged the Wildlife Service to distribute the grains regardless of the weather conditions and to do so several weeks before the coming of the migrating birds. Setting out the grain early would insure that the feed would have the maximum effect in attracting the geese, thereby greatly reducing damage to local crops by the game birds.

The effect of the spring waterfowl migrations on the agricultural economy of the Klamath Basin was the most discussed subject of a number of topics brought before representatives of the local farming industry. Officials from various governmental agencies told local farmers and ranchers of noise making devices manufactured for the purpose of frightening waterfowl away from farmlands, of the objectives of the Wildlife Service's waterfowl program, and of the role of the law enforcement program in protecting the game birds.

Russell advised the assemblage that the grain producers must "help themselves" if they are to minimize damage caused to their crops by the migrating birds.

He explained that farmers must serve their own interests by constantly "hazing" and herding the waterfowl so they learn where they are not wanted. Under such conditions, most of the birds will eventually settle at the refuge where they will be cared for and fed, Russell cited. He then reminded the assemblage of the law requiring that farmers obtain a permit before "hazing" birds off of their lands.

Emcee of the program, Clinton Lostetter, assistant regional supervisor, Branch of Management and Enforcement at the Portland office, then commented on noise-making devices available to ranchers for use in frightening waterfowl from their property.

A number of farmers familiar with the devices reported that the noise - makers "didn't do the job," while another grower announced that "hazing" is effective if undertaken early. Jim Flowers related that hazing the waterfowl as they arrived initially on their flight north produced better results than waiting until large numbers of the birds began arriving. In the latter instance, waterfowl are difficult to frighten away after they have settled in one place for several days, Flowers remarked.

Season Proposed

Walt Jendrzejewski, county extension agent, proposed that a limited hunting season be established in spring as a means of keeping the birds out of private lands under cultivation. Lostetter replied that other areas had solved such problems without setting up a special hunting season and said further that a treaty in effect among the United States, Canada, and Mexico forbids invoking a waterfowl hunting season after March 30 of any year.

Jack Liskey, a Klamath Basin rancher, appraised that "larger concentrations of waterfowl" have been attracted to the Basin annually due to the presence of the bird refuges here. He urged the bureau to "give local ranchers special consideration" because of that fact.

Another rancher, Lewis Furber, noted that ducks coming into the Basin before the opening of hunting season are causing untold damages to crops. He proposed that the game commission consider opening the season two weeks earlier in efforts to minimize that damage.

Blackbird Menace

Don Heard, another Klamath Basin grower, appraised that blackbirds in the Basin were an even greater menace to crops than waterfowl. He said that the local birds fly across his property in such large numbers that "they blot out the sun" and, on occasions, gorge themselves "so full of grain that they can't get off the ground."

Lostetter admitted that Heard had a problem but reported that at the moment there are no means yet known to control an infestation of blackbirds.

Among others present at the meeting were Jim MacFarlane, Tule Lake Refuge; Tom Garrett, game management agent; Joe Smith, Oregon Fish and Game commissions; Bill Rush, U.S. game management agent at Klamath Falls; Keith Cobo, board member of the Klamath County Chamber of Commerce, and Howard Fugii, Oregon Farm Bureau Federation at Salem.
