

Negro Leaders Plan Legal Scramble For Right To March At Night In Alabama Voter Registration Campaign

By United Press International
 Negro leaders at Selma, Ala., have decided to make a legal order rather than physical stand against a state ban on night marches.
 Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. made the decision Monday following a long meeting with attorneys. About 800 Negro leaders waited in a church, prepared to march if King had decided to make a legal order rather than physical stand against a state ban on night marches.
 King said, however, he would lead a march just before dusk Thursday night in which a Negro was critically shot and 10 others injured.
 Earlier Monday, King led a meeting in Selma that the goal of integration was to "diffuse our blood, confuse our minds and degrade our character as a people."
 In New York City, extra police details moved into Harlem Monday to avert possible violence. There were reports that a Negro assassin was captured.
 Followers of assassinated Negro Malcolm X were set on a march that "he will be avenged."
 In Chicago, Black Muslim leader Elijah Muhammad said his followers were innocent of the slaying of Malcolm X whom, Muhammad said, preached war and "died according to his preaching."
