Stan Laurel, Famed Actor, Dies

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (UPI) — Millions will never forget him because he was one of them—the little man, the harmless chap who never succeeds no matter how hard he tries.

That was the story of Stan Laurel's life in the movies — the easy-going fellow who always seems to get knocked about by the big man.

The big man, in Laurel's case, of course was his partner, fat Oliver (Babe) Hardy.

Their partnership ended after a 30-year association in 1957 when Hardy died following a stroke.

Broken-hearted Stan Laurel never again appeared in public. Tuesday Laurel died after a heart attack at the age of 74.

The thin-rubber-faced comedian's fourth wife, Ida, was with him when he was stricken in their modest home here. Laurel had been partially paralyzed since 1953, when he, too, suffered a stroke. In recent years, he also was afflicted by diabetes.

Laurel and Hardy were the most successful comedy team in movie history. They ground out some 300 films, mostly two and three-reelers.

The Laurel and Hardy series included such films as "Babes in Toyland," "Way Out West," "Our Relations," "Blockheads" and "Bomkie Scotland."

Every slapstick routine ever conceived found its way into a Laurel and Hardy movie. Many were a slapstick bit was the brain-child of Laurel, who wrote and directed many of their films.
