The annual Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament gives the contestants a chance to play 18 hands which furnish tests in both bidding and play. In each case after the actual bidding there will be a directed contract and declarer will usually play against a directed lead.

All players get to be declarer, but in these articles I will always move declarer to the South seat in accordance with custom in bridge columns.

Bidding par for the first hand was for North and South to reach four spades. The simple and normal way to get there would be through the bidding in the box and we guess that most of the contestants bid the hand that way.

West was directed to open the king of diamonds and we assume that this lead would have been made without direction at practically all tables.

South is supposed to make his contract and his problem is to avoid the loss of three club tricks. The hand has been set up so that South [illegible] three club tricks if he has to start the suit himself, but there is a way to force his opponents to help him out.

He must win the first trick. Then he must time the play of hearts and trumps in such manner that he will discard one of his diamonds (not a club) on one of dummy's high hearts, ruff out both dummy's low hearts with two of his trumps, lead trumps twice to pull the enemy's teeth and eventually to lead a second diamond from either hand. It won't matter which opponent wins the trick. He will either have to lead a club to give declarer a sure club trick or a diamond to give him a ruff and a discard.

Q—The bidding has been:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

You, South, hold:
♠K 6 5 ♥4 3 2 ♦A Q 7 6 ♣9 5 3

What do you do?

A—Pass. Your bad distribution makes a further bid inadvisable.

TODAY'S QUESTION

You hold the same hand except that your spades are K J 5. What do you do on this same bidding sequence?
