Selma Waits Anxiously For Next Move In Drive

By NICHOLAS C. CHRISS
United Press International

SELMA, Ala. (UPI)—Selma waits with trepidation today to learn what more can happen in this spring of discontent.

Will it be a return to normalcy, or more violence?

A state of physical and mental tiredness hangs heavy over the town. It can be sensed among Negroes and whites alike.

Even the weather seems to have gone awry, turning the skies black Monday and bringing tornadic winds, going from cold to damp to humid during the first week of spring.

Aside from a few scattered marches—on the sidewalks instead of the streets—and an occasional slight flurry of activity, the town is quiet for the first time in 10 weeks.

To some observers, Selma has reached the breaking point when a return to more racial violence could end the role that moderates have played in this town to keep violence at a minimum.

A state of exhaustion can be felt here among the moderates, the strong segregationists, the demonstrators—among all who have marched, walked, prayed, sang, fought, bled, or shrunk from the turmoil.

On one thing almost everyone is agreed: Selma will not be same again.

Out of the unrest and the violence has emerged a proposed voting rights bill now pending before Congress.

One move by Negro leaders, who have mentioned it as a possibility, could push the town headlong into turmoil again. That would be a march to the quiet tree-lined streets of a white residential area.

"When they start marching on your home, don't call the sheriff, call the coroner," one official said grimly.

Gun Permits Soar

Authorities report that gun permits "by the hundreds" have been filled out since the violence began—for whites and some Negroes. The plans of "the movement" — the name given to the civil rights drive by the demonstrators — now have become mostly vague. Where demonstrators once clapped, shouted and sang songs in Brown's Chapel AME Church, gathering place for the demonstrations, little children now sit in a ring of chairs studying their kindergarten lessons.

The Alabama Journal of Montgomery made this point in an editorial:

"We have waved the flag at the bull again and been trampled. Time after time, Alabama has played the fool's game with the predictable consequences. But we seem to love it in some strange, masochistic, way."

Meanwhile, Selma waits.

Convict Use Turned Down

SALEM (UPI)—The Board of Control voted unanimously Tuesday to oppose the use of convict labor on capital construction projects outside the prison walls.

The action was supported by labor and management groups.

But the board rejected the idea by creating a committee to advise whether convict labor should be used in certain instances.

Gov. Mark Hatfield said such a committee could lead to future conflicts.

The board's policy will have no effect on the legislature's demand that the prison dining room be constructed with prison labor.

Hatfield explained to Secretary of State Tom McCall and Treasurer Robert Straub that the board could not "circumvent the law enacted by the legislature."

There were hints, however, that the board might not authorize the start of construction.

The policy statement was the result of several weeks of meetings between McCall, Straub and labor and management spokesmen.

Hatfield has long opposed use of convict labor. He was outvoted on the issue when construction of the women's prison by prison labor was approved.

Demos Rap Newsmen

SALEM (UPI)—Senate Democrats criticized the press, the Republican controlled House and the governor Tuesday in the first major partisan remonstrance of this session in the upper chamber.

Sen. Al Flegel of Roseburg charged the press was "speaking in ignorance" when it labeled the House energetic and the Senate a relaxed body unconcerned with passage of new legislation.

He accused Gov. Mark Hatfield of "playing political poker" when he accused the Senate of lack of action.

Republican minority leader Walter Leth, R - Salem, joined in criticizing press coverage and termed Flegel's Senate Education Committee "one of the best in the legislature."

Sen. Ed Fadeley, D-Eugene, charged Hatfield was behind criticism of the Senate in an effort to hide his disappointment with lack of progress made by the House.

COS Honors 30 Students

WEED—Thirty College of the Siskiyous students qualified for the Honors List. Six students maintained a grade-point average of 3.6 or above to make the President's List. The remaining 24 qualified for the Dean's List with a 3.1 or above GPA.

Sandra Giorgis, a freshman, of Weed made the President's List by maintaining a 3.97 average during the fall term. Three other Weed resident students on the Dean's List are Karl Vidricksen and Rosa Mae Phillips, sophomores, and Lee Ferrero, a freshman.
