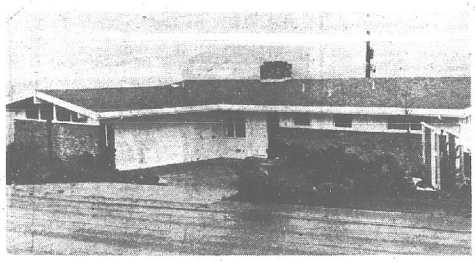
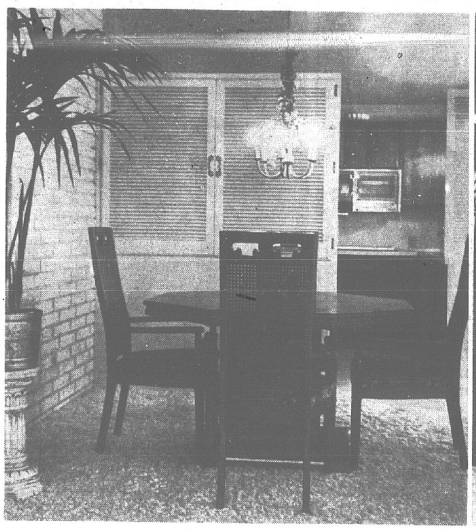
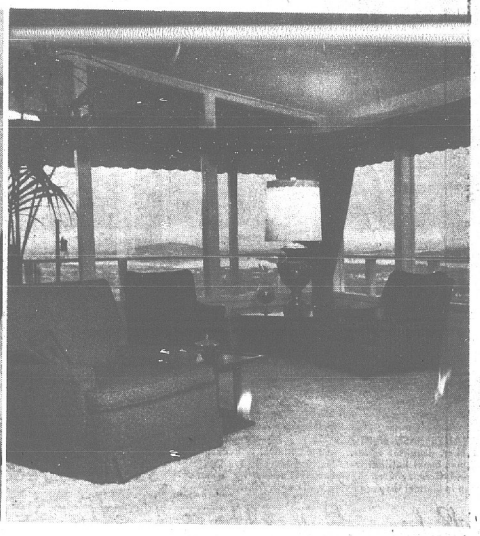
High View Lots Chosen For New Homes







High on Loma Linda Drive, Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Goakey built the home pictured above, using white vertical siding and brick for the exterior. The structure conforms to the contour of the hillside with daylight basement on the lower side. A curved driveway approaches the attached double garage and the front door of the L-shape structure.

Attractive landscaping includes three panels of chipped rock designs in relief such as the one shown at right. These colorful and decorative panels are lighted from the base.

The interior of the Goakey home is spacious and modern. The living room, upper right, has huge picture windows on two sides affording a fine view of the city. Green draw draperies, white lined, are matched with a framing valance. The ceiling and three walls of the room are white. A fourth wall is papered in gray-green figure pattern. Set off with an off-white carpet are the blue chairs, green stripe chairs, bronze sofa and fruitwood tables. Above a light brick fireplace facing the windows is a stunning acid-etch copper sconce.

Adjoining the living area is this dining room, above, separated from the kitchen with louvered cupboard doors. Decorative details here are lovely light fixture, potted palm and bowl of blue glass fruit on the round table.

Mrs. Goakey is shown at right in her kitchen which is painted off-white with birch cabinets and cream appliances. Added feature of this modern kitchen is a grill built in to one counter top. Ample space is also provided for a breakfast table with blue upholstered chairs.

The house is completed with three bedrooms and bath on the ground level and den, playroom and storage area below.

Focal point of the living room is the modern fireplace, left, with raised hearth and glass corner doors. The room has a white ceiling, cream walls and is furnished with green and rose furniture and beige carpeting. The dining area is set off from the living room by sliding shoji doors. The view, upper right, is through the dining room into the kitchen, separated by a breakfast bar. These rooms are paneled in walnut and also have windows offering views of the valley.

Evidence of the thoughtful planning of the owners is their carport, which is built in split levels to accommodate the family cars in addition to their camper. A handy storage room is also included in this plan.
