

Quite a Task to Pick Ranking Tennis Stars

By HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Sports Editor)

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—(United Press)—When the committee of the United States Lawn Tennis association, delegated to rank the American stars, meets at the end of the current season, it will have a job on its hands picking the players for the first 10 in both classes.

First place, of course, does not have to be considered. Selecting the best player in the men's and women's decision is no more than the formality and the exertion of writing William T. Tilden and Miss Helen Wills on the slip of paper.

While, in an extreme case, the winner of the national championship might not be the best player in the country, there is no doubt as to the standing of Tilden and Miss Wills. They are both head and shoulders above their classes. Tilden, because of his differences with association officials passed through a season of comparative inactivity as far as tournament competition was concerned. He did a lot of playing, of course, but before entry into the national tournament in defense of his championship, he had confined his game principally to the exhibition circuit.

Tilden could have cinched first place on the ranking list, however, if he had played only once during the season because in that one tournament he demonstrated more convincingly that he is not only the best player in the United States but the world's champion.

After the most brilliant season of her career, Miss Helen Wills, the 18-year-old national women's champion, did even more than Tilden to win first place on the ranking list. Her claim for a world's championship was not as firmly established as that of Tilden's, but she accomplished enough during a busy season to make her position clear as the women's world's champion for the season, at least.

The pretty, young California girl won the Olympic and national singles championship. With Mrs. George Wightman, Boston, she won the Wimbledon, Olympic and American doubles championship, and with young Vincent Richards she won the American mixed doubles championship. Very little more could have been accomplished by any player.

The council authorized the placing of a street light at the intersection of Oregon avenue and Tunnell street.

Here With Circus Saturday

For those who love stories of the Indians, and the strange and perilous adventures of white men in dealing with the forest tribes, a remarkable anecdote of life in the Virginia woodlands three centuries ago, brilliantly portrayed by a gigantic staff of living actors, including three tribes of Indians, will be seen at Klamath Falls, Saturday, Sept. 27, when the Al G. Barnes largest wild animal circus in the world comes to town.

The Al G. Barnes circus, which grows larger and more gorgeous each year, has provided for lovers of magnificent pageants this season the American gigantic, historic feature, "Pocahontas at the Court of Queen Anne," the extravaganza that opens the big program in which 2,000 wild educated animals from every climate under the sun is represented in daring and thrilling acts.

of New Mexico, are included in the gigantic pageant. There will also be 100 bathing beauties from the "sunkist" shores of southern California, all of whom have been trained extensively for their parts in some of the best motion picture, dramatic, dancing and singing studios on the west coast.

The celebrated "Sacred Snake Dance" enacted by Hopi Indians, clad in skins of wild animals, will be seen. The savages, crazed by the beating of tom-toms, actually wind squirming, deadly rattlesnakes about their half-naked bodies and thrust the heads of the poisonous reptiles in their mouths during the weird ceremony.

You will also see the greatest movie-star of them all, known the world over as "The Grand Old Man of the Screen."—Joe Martin, himself. And last, but not least, you'll see Lotus, 5-ton, largest and only blood-sweating hippopotamus in the world, with "the show that's different"—gorgeously bigger every year.

Say, Folks, Listen!

If you need any Green Slabs now is the time to get them while the weather is ideal for drying them.
