OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY OF KLAMATH FALLS

"Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it"—Abraham Lincoln

THE RIGHT HAND OF FELLOWSHIP

The right hand of fellowship is extended to the people of Klamath County by the merchants and professional interests of Klamath Falls. Grasp it. Feel the strength of its sincerity and eagerness to satisfy—learn of its actions to moulding this—our community—into a greater and more enterprising community.

It's that right hand of fellowship, of welcome, of ambition, of co-operation, which has done so much in contributing to the welfare of our fair town and county.

Think back a few years. Note the many public and private improvements that have been made since then as a drect result of local enterprise.

What motive has prompted those enterprising merchants and professional men? Certainly not selfishness. It is a fact not to be forgotten—those who have contributed did it for the purpose of adding to your convenience or your pleasure. Yes—to contribute good fellowship and good will.

Of course, these community betterments and improvements were not made without faith and sacrifice on the part of our business and professional interests. Quite often, we all know, they came forward with financial aid when they could least afford it. And yet, they did it, and are doing it, with a generous heart and cheerful smile. That's the spirit that has made Klamath Falls and Klamath County so progressive.

And all these interests ask in return is your cooperation in building an even brighter future for this community.

Patronize the home merchants—do not violate that faith they have placed in you. Buy at home and help build a bigger, better place in which to live.

The right hand of fellowship has long been extended—let's grasp it feelingly and in sincerity.

SALVAGE VALUE OF OLD ROADS

A recent report on the salvage value of old roads, prepared from the records of the New York Highway Department, shows the average cost per mile of reconstruction, complete contracts—1919 to 1924 inclusive, to be $36,000 for first class Portland cement concrete and for asphalt macadam for same period, $16,000. This reconstruction which from now on will be the most important work in New York State, covers the rebuilding, to whatever extent is necessary, of the older roads now worn out or become otherwise so unfit as to make their replacement a job large enough to be placed under contract. It is expected that a finished reconstruction contract will leave a road in first class condition to sustain the traffic it will attract. The $20,000 difference in reconstruction cost measures the value of the salvage possibilities of the previous work in connection with the asphalt macadam types. The 1925 lettings show about $21,000 per mile difference in such work.

TODAY'S RECIPES

Baked Egg in Cereal—Baked egg in cereal is simply leftover cereal mixed into milk, placed in individual baking dishes, an egg broken into a depression made by a tablespoon in the center of the dish. This is dotted with butter and baked or boiled until the egg is set. Milk may be added at the table where the egg is beaten.

Stuffed Baked Cabbage in Tomato Sauce—Scoop out a small head of cabbage, removing outer leaves. Grind up scooped part and leftover meat. If more meat is desired the cabbage center may be cooked separately or made into slaw. Onions, seasoning of salt and pepper and an egg if desired to hold the mixture together more solidly.

Fill the cavity with the meat and rice, macaroni or any adaptable leftovers, pour tomato sauce over and bake until well done. Buttered bread crumbs browned on top add to the appearance of the dish, which is nourishing and economical.

Favorite Icing—Cream one teaspoon butter, add powdered sugar, thin with coffee infusion and a few drops of almond flavor. Alternate sugar and thinning until desired amount is made.

Toasted Gimmes—Take ground round steak, seasoned, and thinly spread on buttered bread and boil until done. Fold together two pieces, toast bread and serve hot.

Eye Wonders—As many eggs as desired may be used. Take one egg and flour to make fairly stiff batter, pinch of salt, sugar to taste, a dash of cinnamon or nutmeg and drop into hot fat from fork.

These form queer shapes and are crisp contrast to the maple fluff, which is a glorified tapioca in coffee and milk, flavored with maple, sprinkled with chopped nuts.

SUGGESTION

Here is a delicious dessert for the "company" dinner in hot weather. Bake an angel food cake. When cooled thoroughly cut in squares. Stem and wash fresh strawberries. Sweeten and mash. Let stand one hour on ice. At time of serving mix thoroughly with vanilla ice cream, pour over angel food and serve at once.

Peppermint Ice Cream

Nothing tastes quite so good for dessert in hot weather as ice cream. Peppermint ice cream is a little different from the usual and may just suit your family or guests. Scald two cups cream with one-half cup sugar and one-half cup powdered red and white peppermint stick candy. Chill, add one pint cold cream and freeze as usual.

DINNER STORIES

An Irishman on his way to the races was persuaded by three other occupants of the railway carriage to join in a little game of solo whist. For half an hour he lost steadily, and then to his astonishment, he noticed one of the players, a tough looking specimen who boasted a shade over one eye, produce an ace from nowhere.

"Look here, gentlemen," said the Irishman, "there's one member of the party cheating. I don't wish to cause any animosity, so I won't mention who it is, but if he does it again I'll knock his other eye out."

Mr. Newlyrich strutted into a club to which he had been elected. He looked around to see if there was anybody there he knew, and after a while he discovered a well-known barrister reading by a window.

He walked across to the barrister and held out his hand, palm down. On his third finger glittered a diamond ring he had just bought.

"Hello, Mr. Briefs," he said, wiggling his fingers to make the diamond sparkle. "What would you do if you had that?"

"I'd sell it," said the barrister, "and buy a nail brush."

One afternoon two visitors rang the bell, and, telling them to be seated, Maggie went into another part of the house to see if her mistress was in.

"I'm very sorry," she said, returning a minute later, "but Mrs. Brown went out and won't be back till dinner time."

"That's too bad!" exclaimed one of the visitors. "And to think, too, that I have forgotten my cards. I must——"

"Never mind the cards, ma'am," interjected Maggie. "I told the mistress your names when I went upstairs."

THE BEST OF ADVICE

BY CLARK KINNAIRD

Philosophers of this age, parroting the thoughts of philosophers of other ages, teach us that it is the object of the state to promote the moral aims of mankind.

But is it?

The aim for which mankind exists (a parabolic expression, it has been remarked), these Good Gentlemen tell us, is that a man should act in such and such a manner.

The real aim, Schopenhauer contends, is that "the Will, of which every man is a complete specimen, should turn whither it needs to turn; that the man himself (the union of Thought and Will) should perceive what this will is, and what horrors it contains; that he should show the reflection of himself in his own deed in the abomination of them.

"The State, which is wholly concerned with the general walfare, checks the manifestation of the bad will, but in no wise checks the will itself; the attempt would be impossible.

"It is because the State checks the manifestation of his will that a man very seldom sees the whole abomination of his nature in the mirror of his deeds."

• • • •

Does the reader suppose there are no people in the world as bad as Loeb and Leopold, or other murderers? Does he fail to see that there are many who would act like them if only they could? Then Schopenhauer tells him:

"Many a criminal dies more quietly on the scaffold than many a noncriminal in the arms of his family. The one has perceived what his will is and has discarded it. The other has not been able to discard it, because he has never been able to see what it is.

"The aim of the State is to produce a fool's paradise, and this is in direct conflict of the true aim of life, namely, to attain knowledge of what the will, in its horrible nature, really is."

Thus speaks Schopenhauer, super-realist. Life was not to him a matter of Sweetness and Light. It is natural that he is unpopular. Man dislikes to be told that he wouldn't be so vain if he really knew himself.

HEART AND HOME PROBLEMS

BY MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON

Do tears reform husbands? Here is a letter from a wife who did try crying first. But, like a sensible person, when she discovered that meaning and groaning would not help one bit she turned about face and tried something else. She says:

Dear Mrs. Thompson: Having read so many letters where wives complain of losing their husbands' love, I would like to give a vague glimpse of my married life. Being reared by parents that were altogether too strict, I married at the age of 16 a man nearly 20. I soon began to think I had made an awful mistake. But being taught that divorce was a disgrace on the whole family I knew I had to make the best of a bad bargain. Soon our first baby was born, a girl. But before she was born he was restless and didn't seem to care if I lived or died, which I almost did.

Finally we moved to this city and I saw he was attracted to another married woman. Well, I was heartbroken, for she had it "all over me" as to dress and good looks. I didn't have a cent to buy any clothes and was sick. We quarreled and argued to no avail, so I made him move to another neighborhood, and I made up my mind if he liked to see other women dressed nicely I would, too, if I had to steal his money to do so. Then another baby, a girl, was born and held him pretty close for a while. The doctor told him I would not live. Again everything seemed against me. Then I said if I must die I was going to have a good time while I was alive, and I stopped taking medicine. I bought some nice clothes for myself and kiddies, and took a trip for six weeks, come home and I almost live don the road. I was out in the fresh air as much as possible. Now our baby is eight years old, the other girl is as large and I almost lived on the road. I hubby will say, "Babe, you look like a little doll," and his blue eyes are sparkling. Are we happy? I say we are. MRS. X. Y. Z.

You found out what every wife should find out for herself and that is life is really very interesting even though your marriage doesn't prove to be the success you pictured it would be. It was up to you to change it to suit yourself. A constant lachrymose state assumed by a wife never, never has a noticeable effect on the heart of a husband. If he is hard-hearted enough to cause the tears he won't be bothered much by their dampness. Many wives weep their way through married life and wonder why hubby gets worse and worse, and eventually entirely breaks loose from the tie that binds.

A booster for Klamath county and Klamath Falls and every legitimate industry therein—that's the Klamath News.
