"Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it"—Abraham Lincoln

FAITH IN THE INDIVIDUAL

Herbert Hoover is about the most interesting phenomenon in our public life. We are getting a good deal of preaching and some of it is sound, but Mr. Hoover is a preacher to whom the American people had better give a very special attention. He is preaching with works as well as with words. His sermons are in deeds as well as in precepts. He illustrates in acts and gives his generalizations the force and weight of accomplishment.

He is a man of action, but he has an illuminating faith. It is the ancient American faith in the individual, a faith which most of our reformers seem to have foresworn. While reform turns more and more to government, to legislation, to compulsion, Mr. Hoover is pointing out a clearer, safer, surer path, through the voluntary will and intelligence of the individual.

We have in mind especially his insistence that the evils arising in competitive business can be best remedied, not by multiplying laws against them and clamping more regulations on private enterprise, but by voluntary correction by the business world. "Your organizations and sessions," he said the other day to the National Association of Credit Men, "are taking part in the upbuilding of a new and growing sense of responsibility and self-government in the economic life of the community at large. For self-government comprises more than political institutions. It is more than municipal government. It is more than legislatures and commission. There are many problems that can be solved by agreement amongst groups instead of by law."

This is an extraordinary preachment from an official. Officialism is always after more power for itself, more laws, more regulations, more authority to interfere with and direct and check individual activities. But Hoover is a farseeing statesman who has the root of the matter. He sees, as so many contemporary Americans do not, that our effort to eliminate the excesses of individual self-interest by government control is gradually erecting an official autocracy which becomes more and more oppressive and paralyzing to the initiative and creative energy of the nation. He is far from blind to these excesses. He does not accept them as incurable or propose to get rid of them by denying that they exist. But he has the true American faith in the individual, in the individual's conscience and intelligence, and in progress through the unforced will to see and do right. He has no confidence in short cuts to perfection and sees through the fallacy that the righteousness, which Roosevelt liked to preach, can be created by statute. He knows how delusive that notion is and he offers the true formula, which was the American formula in the beginning, for progress through the intelligence and good will of the individual developed in liberty.

Scientists studying the problem of rising vertically might find some suggestions in a flivver's back seat.

 Luncheon
 Creamed Codfish on Toast
 Head Lettuce Salad
 Griddle Cakes Syrup
 Dinner
 Boiled Tongue
 Creamed Potatoes and Peas
 Radishes Pineapple Ice Cream
 Waters Coffee

TODAY'S RECIPES
Beauregard Eggs—Five hard-boiled eggs, cream sauce. Separate the eggs and put the yolks through a sieve. Melt a tablespoon of butter in a saucepan, add one tablespoon flour and mix smooth, adding gradually a cup of sweet milk. Season, and add chopped whites of eggs. Toast bread, cover with white mixture, then a layer of yolks, then whites again, and then yolks. Sprinkle chopped parsley over the top and serve.

Head Lettuce—Wash a solid head of lettuce, cut in fourths and let stand in salt water for one-half hour. Put in a bag or wrap in cheese cloth and put in cool place—on ice, preferably—until ready to serve. Three tablespoons cheese, four tablespoons salad oil, two tablespoons vinegar, one-half teaspoon salt, a little pepper. Put half the cheese into a bowl and beat in the oil. Add vinegar drop by drop, beating vigorously. Add salt and pepper and the rest of the cheese which has been crumbled. Pour over lettuce and serve.

Boiled Tongue—To boil fresh tongue, first wash thoroughly, using a brush to clean the surface, cover with cold water, add a few peppercorns, cloves, celery top, a slice of onion, one-half tablespoon lemon juice, and salt, bring to a boil and keep at simmering point until the tongue is very tender. Allow it to cool in the liquor, remove and skin. The tongue is then ready to slice or prepare in any desired way. To boil a corned or pickled tongue follow the same directions but add no salt. If the tongue is very salty it may, before boiling, be soaked in cold water for several hours.

Griddle Cakes—Griddle cakes may be made with sour milk helping to use it up when the terrific weather sour it. Use one egg, two cups of sour milk, two cups flour, one teaspoon baking soda, ½ teaspoon salt and a teaspoon sugar. Beat thoroughly and bake on hot griddle. A good warm weather syrup is made with one cup of brown sugar and three-fourths cup granulated sugar and three-fourths cup of water. Boil until syrupy.

Pineapple Ice Cream—To one can of grated pineapple add three pints of cream and one-half cup of sugar. Freeze in the usual way. A little of the pineapple should be held out to serve with the cream.

SUGGESTIONS
 Serve buttered peas in a border of boiled rice and omit the usual potatoes from the menu. Mold peas in unsweetened lemon jelly for an appetizing salad to serve with mayonnaise. Mix them with sardines or salmon and hard boiled eggs and serve on lettuce with mayonnaise for a substantial salad. Creamed peas make an excellent sauce for any fish loaf, and also take the place of a vegetable in the menu where they are thus used. Make nests of mashed potatoes by molding into flat cakes and pressing a round bottomed cup into the center of each. Fill hollow with creamed peas, brush the edges of the nest with egg yolk and brown in hot oven.

THE BEST OF ADVICE
 BY CLARK KIRKMAN

It is about time for us to be rid of the idea that Money is Sinful. The sole authority for the popular delusion that "the love of money is the root of all evil," appears to be in the Bible. But the Bible also gives the advice: "Wine maketh merry; but money answereth all things." Bernard Shaw is not merely being a havian when he declares that money is the most important thing in the world, for he feels that the universal regard for money is the one hopeful fact in our civilization, the one sound spot in our social conscience.

All of us who think that money represents health, strength, honor, generosity and beauty as conspicuously and undeniably as the want of it represents illness, weakness, disgrace, meanness and ugliness; and that not the least of its virtues is that it destroys base people as certainly as it fortifies and dignifies noble ones.

"It is only when money is cheapened to worthlessness for some, and made impossibly dear to others, that it becomes a curse," Shaw observes.

"In short, it is a curse only in such foolish social conditions that life itself is a curse. For the two things are inseparable; money is the counter that enables life to be distributed socially; it is life as truly as silver dollars and bank notes are money."

"The first duty of every citizen is to have money on reasonable terms; and this demand is not complied with by giving four men two dollars each for ten or twelve hours drudgery and another a thousand dollars for nothing."

"The crying need is not for better morals, cheaper bread, prohibition, liberty, culture, redemption of fallen sisters and erring brothers, nor the grace, love and fellowship of the Trinity, but simply for enough money."

"And the evil to be attacked is not sin, suffering, greed, priestcraft, kingship, demagoguery, monopoly, ignorance, drink, war, pestilence, nor and other of the scapegoats which reformers sacrifice, but simply POVERTY."

Let us change "Love of money is the root of all evil" to "Poverty is the root of all evil." Then we will be nearer the truth.

DINNER STORIES

The town council of a small Ontario city had decided upon some extensive improvements in one of the local parks, the chief feature of which was to be the installation of an artificial lake. The majority of the councillors, not without the deepest misgivings on the part of Mayor Sandy MacPherson, who hail-

HEARD AT HOME PROBLEMS

When a married woman falls in love with another man, it is not difficult for her to find enough faults with her husband to make a divorce appear desirable.

A wife writes me:
 Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a woman of forty-five and am the mother of three children half grown. My husband does not love me and will not support me and the children, but goes out nights with other women. I am in love with another man and would like your advice whether I should divorce my husband and marry him. Which would be the best for the children? This man will be broken-hearted and so will I if we can't be married. If I must live with my husband, how will I gain his love? The children think quite a bit of their daddy and he seems to like them. BOBBY

Are you sure, Mrs. Bobby, that your husband does not love you and does not support you and the children, and goes out nights with other women? I think you would be less "sure" if you, a wife and mother, did not happen to be in love with another man, a man you are willing to break up your home to marry. Do you really want to do what is best for the children? Then put this other man out of your life, stay with the daddy the children like, and who likes them, and make yourself more interesting to him.

CATECHISM OF LOVE

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I have a number of questions I would like you to answer for me. 1. Does a person really know when he is in love? 2. Can a person love you and speak unkindly to you some of the time? 3. In true love is there always jealousy? 4. Does a person ed originally from Aberdeen, were planning that it should be stocked in a really sumptuous manner. Swans were to be purchased, and ducks and drakes and geese and goslings and all sorts of strange birds. The mayor listened with growing apprehension to the rash proposals of his over enthusiastic subordinates. At last, when it was moved that they should purchase eight gondolas, it was more than MacPherson could stand:

 "Aw weel, gentlemen," he said, "I hae noo doubt but that we maun hae some gondolas, but we'll be no gettin' but a pair o' them—a mate and a female—an' leave the rest ta' the Lord."

On the station platform of a little Georgia village a visitor ran into an old darkey standing zealous guard over a dilapidated crate housing an ancient billy goat. The goat was methodically chewing upon what seemed to be a piece of rather stiff paper. The gentleman spoke to the darkey:
 "Hello, Sam."
 "Yass suh, mownin' suh."
 "Where are you sending the goat, Sam?"
 "I doan know, boss; he done et up the place whah he goin' at."

Nobody seemed to take much notice of Green. He tried to get a in a word now and then, but somebody with a stronger voice always took command of the conversation. At last the talk turned on the subject of dogs, and Green felt sure that his chance would come, for he owned a dog of which he was proud.
 "There are some dogs," remarked Robinson, that have more intelligence than their masters."
 "That's quite right," said Green. "I've got one like that."
