108 OREGON MOTHERS DIE OF CHILD BIRTH

It has been said that to become a mother is more dangerous than to be a soldier in a front line trench. While this is something of an exaggeration (particularly in states like Oregon, where the people live under good conditions) it does remind us that motherhood is a much more dangerous undertaking than it has any right to be. In 1924, in Oregon, 108 mothers lost their lives in giving birth to children. It is certain that a large proportion of these deaths were unnecessary, and would not have occurred if the proper precautions had been taken. During the same year, 828 infants died. Many of them could have been saved if their mothers had had a better understanding of their care, especially during sickness. Education of mothers and mothers-to-be would save many lives—both their own and their children's. For this reason, the bureau of child hygiene of the Oregon state board of health has prepared a series of letters to prospective mothers, which are sent monthly before the baby comes, and for four months thereafter.
