Inventor Confesses Bank Robbery

Central Press Photos

With no clue to work upon except the description, "Sandy mustache; walks stiffly, speaks with an accent," Dayton, O., police apprehended Fred C. Nichol, manufacturer and inventor, and caused him to confess he robbed a local bank of $21,000. His niece, Miss Helen Sammet, was an employe of the bank, and was one of the seven employes he locked in the vault in making his escape. The two are shown. Nichol's home is also pictured. Financial difficulties caused him to commit the crime, he says.
