

CATTLEMEN TO BE GIVEN RELIEF

public grazing lands and get all the can out of the land from the farmers into the national treasury. These fees will be so high that they would depreciate the value of dependent ranch property.

That rentals of public lands in national forests, etc., be made for a period of ten years, with permission to renew at the end of that time, instead of one year permits, as is the present policy.

That pioneer stockmen be given preference in the selection of these areas.

That permission for the government to increase these fees or to give over to federal courts and out of the executive power of the interior department.

According to Senators Stanfield and Cameron resolutions embodying similar requests are being made throughout the west, and removal of power of the interior department into the hands of congress and federal courts is practically assured in the next session of congress.

West Brings Pressure

Sheepmen all over the west stand opposed to any increase in present grazing fees or against any scale of fees which will create a revenue over and above the needs of maintaining the forests, according to Stanfield and Cameron. They want lease terms as above stated, with specific areas, rather than permits to graze so many head the restoration of areas withdrawn from grazing privileges for the protection of municipal water supplies and a board of arbitration to which appeals can be taken from what are considered arbitrary rulings on the part of forest supervisors.

Cause of Distress

Senator Cameron of Arizona declared that the cattle men in most sections of the west were in a worse plight than the sheep men, although this condition did not exist in all districts. It is not the big packers who are getting the profits. That is evidenced by the great number of packing concerns in the hands of receivers now. It is mismanagement of public lands that is playing a big part in the conditions of sore distress, he said.

YOUTH 20 CONFESSES TO MURDER AND ASSAULT OF LITTLE GIRL, 6

Grotesque Story Told By Son of Wealthy New Jersey Family Who Abducted and Murdered Girl; Mentally Defective From Over-Study

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 7.—Harrison Noel, the 20-year-old youth, who confessed the murder of six-year-old Mary Daly of Montclair, pleaded guilty to the prior killing of Raymond Pierce, colored taxicab driver, Monday, and was then brought from Cedar Grove to the Essex county jail here to await action by the grand jury.

The charge of murder in the little Daly girl's death will be lodged against Noel in Mountain View, which is in Passaic county. There seems to be little doubt that the youth, once an inmate of a hospital for mental defectives, as the result of a condition brought on by intensive study at Dartmouth college, will end his days in an asylum for the criminal insane.

Noel lay down and fell asleep when placed in his cell here. He was fatigued by the long hours that preceded his confession.

Other details of his grotesque story were revealed during the day.

"Oh, mother dear," she called as she cried and sobbed when I led her from the car," said Noel.

There also came to light a story of the peculiar method used by the Montclair police to obtain a final and complete confession from the handsome youth.

This occurred after the officers had returned with Noel from Little Falls, where he had led them to Mary's body.

Noel's mother was brought into the room at police headquarters, and pleaded with her son to tell the whole story.

The police, sitting at a table with Noel, had carefully rehearsed the scene, which they enacted when Mrs. Noel left the room.

Police Captain Mason suddenly jumped to his feet and cried:

"Now you look here, Noel, we've got you at every point. You might as well come through clean. I'm going to go out of this room, and unless you have confessed everything before I come back in ten minutes—"

Here Mason slammed his revolver down on the table.

"If I was holding what you're holding, I'd take that gun and shoot myself," and Captain Mason apparently in great agitation, started to leave the room.

Detective Harry Walsh jumped to his feet, grabbed Capt. Mason and said:

"Oh, don't be so mad, captain—"

he'll tell us, keep calm and Noel will tell us everything.

Meanwhile Noel, badly frightened, was staring at Capt. Mason.

"No, I'm going, and I give him just ten minutes to come across," said Mason, and he started for the door all over again.

Noel jumped from his chair with a shriek:

"I'll tell, I'll tell—stay here! I'll tell!"

Then he confessed the killing of the child, the killing of Pierce, and the shooting of a man who pursued him after the kidnaping.

OREGON, THE BEAUTIFUL Wolf Don't Knock At Postal Clerks' Door; Neither Does Wealth

By DAVID ELSWORTH
Oregon, the beautiful,
A star of our nation's pride,
Covered with valleys, mountains and lakes.
Kissed by the ocean's tide,
Rivers that linger, then rush to the sea,
Sent'nals that pierce the sky,
Craters deep and lakes of blue,
And hearts that never die.

Oregon, the beautiful,
Fields of waving grain,
Like billows of a summer sea,
Roll on and on again
Its mighty rivers are plowed by craft,
Tie girded by bands of steel,
Its highways reach from cave to peak,
Its commerce the world can feel

Oregon, the beautiful,
The land that God loves best,
Way out beyond the setting sun,
Out where the wild fowls nest,
Its homes are scenes of beauty rare,
And no place east or west,
Are found the mines of untold wealth,
As Oregon, the best.

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 7.—The wolf isn't serenading the postal clerks, but there isn't a chance of them ever being wealthy, barring the death of a millionaire aunt, uncle or cousin. These were the observations of John H. Bartlett, first assistant postmaster general, in an address before several hundred delegates to the national federation of postal clerks in convention here Monday. "Speaking of your job, you don't really expect to get rich at it. You never would have mapped out your life's work in the government employ if you had expected to be wealthy," said Bartlett.

Then to assure the limited number of some of the younger employees of government official address: "Do not be jealous of those who are ever. Few people, anyway, are rich. But many find happiness."
