

POULTRY SHOW WILL ATTRACT MANY AT FAIR

Continuous broadcasting by the blue-bloods of the feathered world will be in order daily in the big poultry show at the Jackson County Industrial Fair.

It goes without saying that the management will not furnish each bird with a microphone to "tell it to the world," but the fact remains that a cackling chorus of birds will be "on the air" from the time the gates of the big fair open until they close September 19. Proud roosters, cocks, hens and pullets of all shades, colors and breeds, will try to outdo each other in attracting the attention of passers-by.

Superintendent W. J. Warner is making preparations for the biggest poultry show in the history of the fair. A great variety of birds will be exhibited, including American, Asiatic, Mediterranean, English, Polish, Continental, Hamburg and Orientals. The usual number of ducks, geese and turkeys will be on hand to give novel tone to the show.

Liers and Layers

"Liers and layers" are the latest classification into which all hens have been placed by fair poultry experts. The liars are the slackers who eat much, talk much, but do little, if any, laying. The layers are the ones who produce the eggs and must support the liars, unless the flocks are culled and the liars sent to the chopping block. The value of culling flocks will be stressed by specialists at the fair.

To Advise Raisers

A few suggestions to fanciers on how to get birds ready for the show ring have been mailed out by Superintendent Warner. He points out that it is not difficult to get the birds ready for exhibition. He urges that birds be given lots of ground to keep them in fine physical condition, and that they be kept free from lice and disease. If this be done, the battle is almost won. Only a little extra care is necessary the last few days to put them in show shape, he concludes.

Vanderbilt Cash in Bus Business

William H. Vanderbilt, now in possession of a $5,000,000 trust fund left by his late father, is no longer a society idler. He has acquired control of the Newport and Providence Street Railway Co., in Rhode Island, and is replacing the electric trams with motor busses. The first Vanderbilt millions were made in the transportation business by his great-great-grandfather.

PAVILION AT FAIR TO HOUSE FRUIT DISPLAY

The agricultural pavilion, the largest exhibit building on the Jackson county fair grounds is being prepared to receive the greatest exhibit of fruit and farm products that have ever been assembled under one roof in Southern Oregon. The quantity will be surpassed only by the State fair, and the quality is unsurpassed at any fair.

Those who have seen the wonderful display of products in this pavilion at former fairs will tell you that you should by all means visit the Jackson County Fair and see the wide variety of products which grow to such perfection.

The Rogue River Valley pear will be a special feature of the combined exhibits of this building, and the growers are taking especial interest in seeing that more and larger displays of their choice fruit is provided.

All the irrigated sections of the county will be represented with products in the pavilion and exhibitors in adjoining counties have been invited to participate with a large display of their products.

play of their products. The directors of the fair are working to make the exhibits in the agricultural pavilion the largest and most attractive of any fair yet held. An information bureau will be maintained to dispense information to hundreds of visitors and tourists who attend each year.
