Transformer Blown; McCarthy Flappers Think Its A Murder

This story has very little scene to it due to the fact that the lights and electric connections were nihil and the moon which might have shed a little ray of light had been hidden for several hours behind rain and storm clouds.

The time is quite definite however. It was 1:30 Wednesday morning.

A scream pierced the blackness of the morning. And a shot, voluminous and clear rang the air!

A perfect sentence for a murder on a clammy night.

And three young ladies huddled together in one Murphy-in-a-door bed too frightened to move or call the janitor.

A grating sound! 'Hist!' exclaimed one, "they're sliding the corpse into the undertaker's wagon. I've heard the same sound millions of times."

But even young ladies in the McCarthy apartments have a sense of curiosity they can't overcome and trembling with fear all three managed to press the button that summons the janitor to the phone.

"Only a lady having a nightmare, Miss, and the noise was the transformer blowing out."

Shades of despondency and a good story gone to smash.
