As purveyor of misinformation, the Evening Herald, in reporting a meeting held at Malin last Thursday evening, September 17, 1925, overplayed its hand. It not only was not contented to distort the truth, but chose to print blatant falsehoods. Ignorance can not be pleaded for not printing the facts in the case, since the Evening Herald claimed to have capable representatives at the meeting. What the purpose of the Herald was in printing such a article is not apparent, but in so doing it displayed less intelligence than one of the white-faced crows, to which it referred in a painful attempt at being witty.

The object and purpose of the meeting were clearly stated at its beginning, and they were actually as stated. All means available were used in giving notice of the meeting, and there was no haste in calling the meeting, and there was no intention to keep the date from any one. Neither the Southern Pacific, nor any other railroad company had anything to do with calling the meeting or dictating its policy. The meeting was purely local and no representative of any railroad company was invited to be present, and if the hirings of the Southern Pacific, or any other railroad, as stated by the Evening Herald, were present, they came upon their own initiative. And neither was the Evening Herald invited to attend, and if any railroad representative was there he had as much right to be present as did the hirings of the Evening Herald.

At this meeting the Southern Pacific was neither eulogized nor praised; no picture was painted of any prosperity coming to the Tule lake country if the Southern Pacific built a line through this section; no attempt was made, nor intended to be made, to influence or stampede either the grimy, fatigued-faced farmers, or the white faced crows; there was no objection or obstruction offered to entrance of the Hill lines into Klamath Falls, and any statements to the contrary, made either by the Evening Herald or any one else are malicious falsehoods.

Why the Evening Herald chose to make deliberate false statements is not apparent, but one thing is not only apparent, but assured, and that is the Evening Herald is not accomplishing anything for itself, and the slime and ooze which it is attempting to cast at others still clings to its source. Malin has no objection to offer for the Evening Herald fighting the Southern Pacific, but it can not use Malin as a weapon or as ammunition in carrying on its warfare with the Southern Pacific or any other corporation or person.

The Evening Herald spoke one truth, and that is: there is no internal dissension in Malin and it is not possible for it to stir up any such strife no matter how much puerile prating it prints. Malin can solve her own problems without the assistance of the Evening Herald, and if at any time it wants any assistance from that source, it will extend suitable invitation. The Evening Herald chose to hold Malin up as an example of unity of purpose for Klamath Falls to follow. If Malin had a yellow rag masquerading as a newspaper, printing venomous screed, it is quite possible that there would be more dissension, proportionally in Malin than there is, or ever was, in Klamath Falls. As previously stated, Malin has not asked, nor does it need any assistance from the Evening Herald in settling its community problems, but as a matter of justice

Malin would like to have the Evening Herald tell the truth as it is, or forever keep shut its filthy trap. "F. M. TROUT."

STEAMSHIP USED NO SEARCHLIGHTS, REPORT

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—(Sunday)—United Press—The City of Rome used no searchlights in searching for wreckage or survivors of the United States submarine S-51, which it rammed Friday night, the navy department was officially advised early Sunday in its first official detailed version of the disaster.

This information was given in the story told by Dewey Kile, survivor, to naval authorities, who reported in detail to the navy department.

The steamer backed away after ramming the submarine and he was in the water for an hour before being picked up by a lifeboat, during which time Kile saw one of his crew mates, F. C. Wiseman, drown.

Lott and Williams Work Into

CHICAGO, Sept. 26.—(United Press)—Lott and Williams, who have been working their way into the finals of the national tennis tournament, defeated the Missouri pair of Ted Drown and Fred Smith. Lott defeated Drown, 6-3, 6-4, 6-3. Williams won from Smith, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4. The Chicago pair then defeated as the outcome would have had bearing on the situation.

Lott and Williams will meet middle states team of William Tilden and Manuel Alonso in finals tomorrow for the championship.
