SPORTS DONE BROWN

Washington goes into the world's series this year under different conditions than existed on the team when the big melee opened in 1924.

These three men are Manager Harris, Roger Peckinpaugh and Walter Johnson.

Harris believes that the spike wound he received in his hand in one of the last games with Cleveland will have healed by the time the opener blown around.

Peckinpaugh and Johnson both have strained ligaments in their legs.

In Johnson's case this may not prove as great a handicap as in Peck's case, but it might slow down the Big Swede's fielding.

But in Peckinpaugh's case there is a real cause for worry. The great shortstop was forced out of three games of last year's classic by a Charley horse.

Peckinpaugh and Johnson both have strained ligaments in their legs.

An interesting angle in connection with the annual selection of the most valuable player to his team in the American league is the absence of Yankee players among the leading candidates for the honor, which was accorded to Roger Peckinpaugh, veteran shortstop of the Washington Senators.

Earl Combs, struggling young outfielder, and Bob Meusel, fellow gardener, were tied for the leadership in the Yankee ranks.

Herb Pennock drew four votes, Benny Bengough and Lou Gehrig two, and Jumping Joe Muzan one.

That these men did not receive more votes is not a reflection on their efforts. It means that the Yankee outfit as a whole was such a hopeless, disjointed outfit that what sincere efforts were put forth by individual members of the team were buried under an avalanche of punk efforts by other members and the general demoralization of the once powerful champions.

Owner Wrigley of the Chicago Cubs is foregoing other forms of exercise these days and getting his daily dozen by kicking himself all around the Cub offices.

Aldridge was considered just a mediocre pitcher with the Cubs—mediocre to the extent that Wrigley was more than willing to include him in the deal last spring that sent George Grantham and Al Neihaus to Pittsburgh for Wilbur Cooper, Rabbit Maranville and Charley Grimm.

Bill McKechnie proceeded to make Aldridge a winning pitcher—or perhaps let him alone that he might become one. He now ranks as one of the best pitchers in the game and is one of the Pirates' aces.

MR. AND MRS. MANNING BEING CONGRATULATED

Horace Manning is receiving the congratulations from his many friends who in return are the recipients of cigars, in honor of the birth of Horace Milton Manning Jr., to Mrs. Manning in Seattle where she has been for a brief time.

Manning Jr. was born last night in the Swedish hospital. Mrs. Manning and son will return to the city in the near future, according to her sister, Mrs. Howard Perrin.

CUPID SCORES AGAIN

William Brewer and Miss Gladys Grene Darling both stepping into the matrimonial ship for the first time were issued a marriage license in the office of the county clerk yesterday afternoon.

Both Brewer and his bride gave their residence as Fort Klamath. Brewer gave his occupation as a Texas capitalist.
