DUCKS GET JAGG SHINER PINCHED

Mud Hens Get Swacked Up So Neighbors Inform Cops And Still Is Taken

Had the hundreds of mud hens, whose present habitat is Klamath lake, been abstemious, Arthur Brown would not, in all probability, at present be faced by several charges having to do with violations of the prohibition laws.

At least that is the opinion of Justice of the Peace Ed Kendall, to whom various reports regarding the case came yesterday.

The story of Brown's alleged activities and subsequent arrest is unique in these parts. Saturday officers were advised that Brown, apparently, was breaking the law and, later, armed with a search warrant, they raided his place, found a still, about 60 gallons of liquor and other paraphernalia.

And the reason for neighbor's suspicions?

For some time prior to the time that they conferred with officers, they had watched the peculiar antics of the mud hens on Klamath lake. Day after day the fowls would gather about a certain spot and dive for some morsels, of which, apparently, they were inordinately fond. Occasionally the hens would show a disposition to quarrel over that which they sought.

Then, so the story goes, persons saw Brown attempting to sink deeper into the lake whatever it was the ducks sought. Apparently he did not like their concentrated action in salvaging something of which he wished to rid himself.

The persons investigated further. Their noses knew, and told them that all, on Klamath lake, was not as it should be.

They suspected that mud hens which, in the past, had given every indication of being law-abiding, were manifesting a tendency to dissipate.

And, according to the information received by Judge Kendall, their information was right. The hens were diving for corn and peach mash which Mr. Brown was casting into the lake. In the mornings the fowls were seeking to rid themselves of "hang-overs" which were outgrowths of the night before.

Came Saturday when the neighbors notified McBride.

And because about 200 mud hens could not take it or leave it alone, Arthur Brown today faces a number of charges.

LOCAL COMPANY IMPROVES PLANT

Dye Works Installs Huge New Gasoline Machine With 1000 Gal. Capacity

With the installation of the latest and most modern cleaning machinery on the market, the Klamath Dye Works, 421 Main street, have just completed an improvement which will place that establishment on a par with any like business anywhere. Officials of the Klamath Dye Works yesterday announced they have put in one of the new Holland-Wirt gasoline cleaning machines.

These great machines keep a continual flow of clean gasoline running through garments being washed.

Two large tanks have been built under ground, one with a capacity of 450 and another with a capacity for 550 gallons. This makes a 1000 gallon capacity and that 1000 gallons of gasoline will be ceaselessly running through garments being cleaned. The gasoline is filtered after leaving the clothing, which does away with clothing being immersed in dirty fluids. The company also has a process which eliminates the odor of the gasoline completely.

The machine, itself represents a financial outlay of $1,500, besides the big electrically driven motors which operate it.

"Any garment going through this machine," said Paul Lambert, head of the dye works, "comes out as clean as it is humanly possible to make it."

MOE BUYS THEATRE

Friends of "Bud" Moe, former Klamath Falls manager of the Pine Tree theatre will be glad to learn of his success in the south with the announcement received in the city yesterday that Moe had purchased a theatre on San Pedro street in Los Angeles, which he is now operating under his management.

Moe recently married a Hollywood girl and his many friends are busy sending him wires of congratulations.

8 POUND GIRL ARRIVES

Klamath county's census rose a notch yesterday, when it was recorded that a daughter weighing eight pounds had been born Saturday to Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Burgdorf, prominent ranchers of the Dairy district.

This is the second girl and the second child as well. She has not been named, according to her father, who was in the city yesterday afternoon passing the cigars.
