Klamath Falls and Billions

Huge Sums Are Associated With District

I. E. Vining, president of the state chamber of commerce, yesterday addressed the Klamath county chamber of commerce forum luncheon, as the chief guest and speaker of the day. During the course of his remarks this fluent and entertaining talker impressed deeply upon his hearers the vital significance which should be given the railway hearing at Portland by citizens of this city and district.

President Vining, in emphasizing the far-reaching effects involved in the controversy, particularly stressed the fact that while folk in other cities of the United States talked future prospects in hundreds of thousands, in millions and, in some cases, in billions, when Klamath Falls and this district was referred to now-a-days, monied terms were mentioned only in billions.

Think it over. A conception of just what a billion dollars is, may impress upon the minds of those apathetically inclined toward the railway controversy, just what the chief captains of industry have in mind when they speak of projects now passing the preliminary stages of infancy.

They are talking big, and they mean big. And if it is just these billion dollar issues that the enemies of Klamath county would steal from her. This phase, however, is but one of the great issues at stake. The fact and a vastly important one remains that Klamath Falls and Klamath county are now being given widespread publicity such as it could never have hoped for otherwise. People who never heard of this community, or its significance in the warring schemes of the master builders of today, will hereafter glance with keener interest toward this section of the United States and particularly this corner of the state of Oregon.

Give Our Railroads Credit

America Best Off of All Nations

A comparison of railroad and sleeping car fares in the United States and Europe shows that passenger transportation charges in this country are substantially lower than first-class rates abroad.

Reduced to a mileage basis, passenger rates—including sleeping car charges—in England average 6.3 cents a mile, while in our country rates average approximately 4.8 cents a mile. Rates in continental Europe are much higher than in England.

Now that it's coming winter the beauty contest girls better quit being the gay grasshopper and make a noise like the busy little ant. And, by the way, judging by the pictures of 'em, a lot of those able-bodied damsels should be able to support a pretty good man in the style to which he has been accustomed. Don't crowd now, fellows.
