Probes Mitchell's Blast of Charges

Sensational charges of Col. William A. Mitchell, demoted assistant chief of the army air service, regarding the blame for the Shenandoah accident, are being investigated by Maj. Gen. Eli A. Helmick (above) under orders of the war department. This is regarded as a preliminary to court-martial proceedings against the colonel.

At the Hall Hotel—"Once upon a time there were two traveling men and one sold shoes for Cinderella's feet and the other sold nice comfy ones for old ladies' tired feet and they both came from a little town called Rochester, New York.

"They were both called drummers and one wore a gray felt hat and the one with shoes for old ladies wore a red carnation in his gray suit.

"And the man who sold little Cinderella shoes was mad at the gray suit man because he printed his name on the register of the hotel and he ridiculed him for selling 'Granny Slippers'."

That was last night in the Hall hotel when E. W. Thull of Rochester printed his name on the register sheet and William Burness didn't like it. But there are just as many nice old ladies with bunions and corns that need comfort as young ladies with dancing inclinations and both men are content in selling their own kind of shoes, one with the gray felt and the other with the pretty carnation.
