INDIAN SUSPECTS HELD BY POLICE FOR QUESTIONING

Red Hairs of Wagner Girl Entangled in Mane of Horse Damaging

EUREKA, Cal., Oct. 24.—(United Press)—The body of pretty 18 year old Carmen Wagner, lay in the morgue here tonight while two half breed Indians suspected of her slaying were held in the county jail for questioning.

Brought down from the mountains where the corpse was discovered yesterday the girl's body showed signs of assault which only hinted at the terrors of the days during which she was held captive by the man or men who killed her sweetheart, Henry Sweet, to get her.

Jack Ryan and Walter David are the men suspected of the double crime. Both deny any complicity in the killings. Suspicion was first turned to David by long marks on his face, like finger scratches, and by his deep concern in the hunt for Miss Wagner's body.

The marks were caused by riding his horse through deep underbrush he explained.

But District Attorney A. W. Hill, declares that red hairs, matching the tiffin hair of Miss Wagner, were found entwined in the mane of David's horse and the prosecutor considers this a clinching argument.

No charges will be preferred against the men until the inquest is completed, probably not before tomorrow.

A cursory examination indicated that she was alive for at least five days after Sweet was shot down, October 16, at the spot where they had been camping while deer hunting.

Then when the trail of searching passes grew hot, the girl's abductors killed her too, with two shots through the neck and temple, and buried her body in a shallow grave. She had been struck over the head with a rock as well, it was declared, evidently when she was first captured, as that wound had partially healed.

5—Farmers and farmers' bankers said repeal of the inheritance tax would place an additional burden on the already overladen man in the field.

Two Men Rescued By Mem- bers of Squadron Follow- ing Course of Flight

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 24.—(United Press)—One more name was yesterday added in flaming letters to the roll of honor for those who died for the cause and advancement of aviation.

The life of Lieut. Edgar L. Adams attached to VF-1 aircraft squadrons, battle fleet, was snuffed out early Saturday near Ocean Side and the lives of Lieut. L. C. Stevens and Aviation Chief Machinist J. Mills of the Langley's aircraft detachment, temporarily based on North Island were miraculously saved, when their planes in a heavy fog, were reported to have crashed in mid air while enroute to San Francisco for participation in Navy Day exercises there.

The De Havilland plane, piloted by Lieut. Stevens was, according to eye witnesses of the collision at Oceanside, attempting to make a forced landing on account of engine trouble when the fighting TS plane, piloted by Lieut. Adams, flying in the rear of the squadron formation crashed into it and both planes dived head first into the ocean.

The body of Lieut. Adams when picked up was still found strapped in the cockpit and crushed beneath the left wing which had been forced back over the body either by the force of the fall or the collision with the other plane.

Lieut. Stevens and Machinist Mills were rescued by Lieut. James V. Carney, who while flying with the squadron saw their plane dive into the sea, according to information received by the commander of the aircraft forces late today.

Stevens and Mills were taken to an Oceanside hospital, where they were reported as resting easily late today. They were suffering from bruises and shock. A naval ambulance left here to bring them to the naval hospital for treatment.

The body of the dead aviator will be brought here, where interment will probably be made. He leaves a wife and one child. He was born in New Jersey on December 14, 1865 and had been with the aircraft squadrons' battle fleet since 1923.

KLAMATH GRIDS DEFEAT ASHLAND BY 20-7 SCORE

Local Footballers Take Full Quarter to Get Warm Up for Business

It took the Klamath men the entire first quarter to get next to themselves on a foreign field Saturday afternoon, but when they did the Ashland gridsters kissed the pigskin goodbye and the game went to the boys from across the mountains.

History, however, repeated itself and in the last two minutes of play the Ashland men, given courage over the entrance of some six subs from the Klamath bench, put over a touchdown by a brilliant pass and three ground-gaining line plunges. The final whistle found the score resting at 20 to 7 in favor of Klamath.

With the kick-off Ashland sent the ball hurtling through space into the arms of a Klamath man who lost on a fumble. Ashland was forced to punt on downs and from then on Klamath went speedily down the field. During the first quarter she lost the ball but twice on downs and prevented Ashland in making but a see-saw headway. NON-STOP DANCE MARATHON IS ON

Sheikish Looking Youths and Flappers Shuffle Their Stuff By Hours

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 24.—(United Press)—The non-stop dance got underway at Rutherford's dance emporium here tonight, with 27 contestants "shufflin' their stuff" to the savage strains of a negro jazz band.

Nineteen sheikish-looking youths and eight flappers started in the Charlestonian marathon. The girls were flimsily clad and danced without stockings to keep cool as possible during the furious contest.

After warming up to a brisk pace at the start the dancers settled down to a leisure "low-down" Charleston which includes a full repertoire of the steps.

Some of the contestants soon tired and fell to a series of less strenuous struts and kicks after the first hour of the ankle-drums Charleston.

The feminine steppers appeared to have the edge on their male counterparts at this stage of the endurance test. One youth collapsed after the first forty minutes, and was carried from the floor by attendants.

A physician will be on hand to attend the dancers and rule out those showing signs of exhaustion. Preparations were made to give the survivors nourishment in the form of soup at midnight.
