

NEWS BIRTHDAY PARTY ATTENDED BY HUGE CROWD

to visit its plant is ample evidence that honest service is appreciated. Further, that the success of this newspaper is amply justified in the good opinion of this community.

And the newsmen got in on the birthday party. They were not interested in plants and machinery. They see enough of them, but they were interested in the movies. The entire gang of 52 went to the movie show as guests of The News.

It would be a vain endeavor to attempt to print names of those who attended the birthday celebration. Volunteers served punch, the supply of which had to be replenished several times, but the reporter has lost his notes containing their names in the crowd.

But we don't want those who had this opportunity to see a newspaper in the manufacture to lose their notes or forget what they saw.

to hold closed sessions, the president should promulgate new orders to that effect."

In speaking of the attempt to influence her testimony before the board of inquiry Mrs. Lansdowne named Capt. Paul Foley, judge advocate of the Shenandoah inquiry, and Capt. W. R. Gheardi, personal aide to Secretary of the Navy Wilbur. She testified that a prepared statement was submitted to her for her signature.

It was after her appearance that Maj. Walsh took the stand for a large part of the day, contending counsel fought for and against his testimony. After telling of the recent Hawaiian maneuvers, during which he said there was apparent a woeful lack of co-operation between the army and navy, in use of aircraft, Walsh was finally permitted to unfold the tale of the planned Central American air mail route.

"We made the trip and reported that the air mail route was feasible and greatly desired by the countries visited," he said. "We charted the airways and furnished the countries with the charts."

"In our report we stated that we believe that the war department should make every effort to establish the route, pointing out that one or more foreign concerns then active would be in the field to get the route."

Gen. Mason Patrick, head of the army air service, concurred in the report, Walsh declared, and advised the war department that it should be done immediately.

MRS. FRED NEIL SHOT TO DEATH

declare that he had been sullen and morose for the past few days, but according to members of the Neil family he had been in the best of spirits around the house. He is the son of A. B. Jilison, a pioneer of Jackson county. Members of his family had not been reached last night.

Little Girl Finds Victims
The first intimation that a tragedy had occurred in the little white house on Sherman street came when Little Joan ran to the police station crying, "there is a dead man lying on our back porch."

Ashland officers investigated immediately and found the body of Mrs. Neil lying concealed from view from the front of the house with Jilison's body lying partially in the kitchen with his head and shoulders on the back porch.

Authorities Investigate
Sheriff Ralph Jennings and the coroner were called and Jennings, on the scene of the murder together with Chief of Police George McNab, went over the ground in an effort to reconstruct the crime.

That the tragedy occurred shortly after one o'clock is evidenced by the fact that the dishes had been placed in the dish pan with the soap laying near by and a puddle of water on the drain board of the sink. According to police this proves that the shooting occurred shortly after dinner, when Mrs. Neil was preparing to wash the noon dishes.

Mrs. Neil had apparently gone to the back porch before the shooting due to the fact that there was no blood on the kitchen floor, showing that the body had not been dragged to the rear after the shooting.

No Motive Advanced

Absolutely no reason can be given for the murder by any of the intimate friends of the family or of Jilison's. Apparently devoted to the children and almost one of the family itself during his residence with them Jilison's friends are at loss to furnish a motive for the tragedy.

Mrs. Neil is survived by her husband, Fred Neil and three children, Joe, 18, Kay, Frederick, 16, and Jean aged 8.

In addition she is survived by several brothers, Kay Loosley of Fort Klamath and Ed Loosley of Hornbrook, her parents Mr. and Mrs. George Loosley and many well known residents of southern Oregon, who are related to the Loosley family. She is also a niece of Captain O. C. Applegate of Klamath Falls.

Jilison is known to be survived by several brothers and sisters and his parents Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Jilison of Ashland.

An autopsy will be held this morning over the two bodies.

time hid the full scope of the tragedy.

Although it was believed at first that the death toll might not exceed five, the searchers discovered four unidentified bodies in the afternoon, after cutting through steel beams, that had blocked their way into the last sleeper of the slower train.

Removal of part of the beams enabled them to release Arthur W. Gross a general electric engineer from Schenectady who had been held tight and in great pain for many hours, with his head pillowed on the dead body of Maj. Gross, of Toronto.

The searchers were then able to reach parts of the wreckage previously inaccessible and soon they had found the bodies of three additional men, all clad in pajamas, who were taken out into the rain through the Pullman windows.

Survivors told gruesome stories of the carnage in the last sleeper. "I was awakened by the crash and the grinding noise of steel as the car telescoped," said C. D. Vannorst of Catonsville, Md. "The lights went out and I had no idea what had happened. My berth had been let down and I was imprisoned. I could not get out because of the great quantity of debris all about me."
